BEECH GROVE CITY COUNCIL

Meeting, July 5

- What happened: Ordinances 13 was tabled. Ordinance 14 was passed on first reading.
- What it means: Ordinance 13 establishes fees for building permits. Last month, the council formed a committee to research the topic further. The committee met, but has not reached a final conclusion.

Ordinance 14 would prohibit door-to-door sales and sales of second-hand goods, with exemptions such as protection of religious and political speech.

- What's next: Ordinances 14 will undergo third readings in August.
- What happened: Resolutions 10, 11 and 12 were approved. Ordinances 15 and 16 were approved on first reading. Ordinance 17 was approved on all three readings.
- What it means: Resolution 10 is a lease agreement between the city and Beech Grove City Schools for the Hornet Park Community Center, the property including the soccer fields and tennis courts.

Resolution 11 recognizes Ron Eck for his contributions to the community, particularly the Beech Grove Little League. The entrance drive to Hornet Field will be named Ron Eck Drive.

Resolution 12 states that anyone handling money in the city has to be bonded.

Ordinance 15 has to do with fee structures in the City Court. There were fines that were too small to act as a deterrent to violators. The fees were already set by the city in previous ordinances.

Ordinance 16 repeals an old ordinance pertaining to massage parlors. The ordinance was written, as Mayor Dennis Buckley said, to keep unwanted businesses out. The ordinance was rewritten to pertain to massage therapy, requiring these businesses to obtain a yearly license and be subject to inspection. There are three massage therapy businesses in Beech Grove.

Ordinance 17 appropriates funds for the city to do additional paving projects this year. The city will apply for these funds to be matched by the Indiana Department of Environmental Management.

■ What's next: Ordinances 15 and 16 will undergo second reading at the August council meeting.

In brief...

Franciscan St. Francis, in recognition of its 100 years in Beech Grove, announced a $400,000 donation to the city to be used on its greenway, trail project. Crossroad Engineers will design phase one of the greenway. The city has received $2.6 million federal funding but must match that with $1.1 million – to which the Franciscan donation will assist. Construction of this project is not expected for another four years.

Ryan Tusing

Lieutenant feels at home serving a small community in the big city at the Beech Grove Fire Dept.

BEHIND the BADGE

Compiled by Nicole Davis

Ryan Tusing said being a firefighter is a gratifying profession, as they're constantly helping others in their time of need. Getting to know the people, in and out of the firehouse, is what he says he enjoys most.

"You definitely have to be a people person in this career, not be afraid to talk to people, meet new people and help them in their crisis," he said.

Ryan grew up in Culver, Ind. After graduating from Ball State University, he and his wife, Allison, moved to Indianapolis. They reside in Franklin Township with their children, Evan, Justin and Bradley.

Ryan came to the Beech Grove Fire Department in February 1996. He spent eight years serving between the ambulance and the back of the engine, eight years as an engineer, and the past four years as a lieutenant.

"When I moved here from my small town of 1,500 people, I thought I was moving to the 'big city' of Beech Grove," he said. "When you're working fire and EMS in a small town, you know everybody. You're taking care of sick people that you know; I didn't want to do that. I moved to Beech Grove and thought I'd never know anyone I'm taking care of. After being on 20 years, Beech Grove is a nice, small community in the big city. You do get to know people. I do miss the small town and Beech Grove kind of fills that void. It's amazing the people you get to know in 20 years, and build relationships with."

What was your inspiration to become a firefighter?

It's every kid's dream. Growing up in a small town in Northern Indiana, when there was a fire, the fire whistle would go off. I used to ride my bicycle to the fire station to watch the firemen get into their gear and go on the fire runs. I'd sit in the dispatch room and listen to the radio traffic while a firefighter would be talking to the firemen and would explain things to me. I was fascinated with it.

What has been one of your most gratifying moments on the job?

The thought of helping someone, or seeing the look on a kid's face when they see the fire station. When parents see us they'll point out to their kids, 'there's a fireman.' They're always waving at us. It's neat that so many people look up to us.

What aspect of the job do you find most challenging?

Being an officer, it's some of the day-to-day stuff. The runs can be stressful and challenging. But dealing with your crew, it's like a family. You're with these other people and dealing with their good and bad days and trying to make sure everyone's getting along and getting things done.

What do you enjoy doing in your off-time?

I have three boys - 17, 15 and 11. We are busy spending time with my kids, taking them to soccer games and doing all that fun parent stuff. I also like doing genealogy, but don't have much time for that.

What are your future goals, professionally or personally?

To continue to improve myself as an officer and firefighter. To stay as healthy as possible, to retire a healthy individual and enjoy my retirement.

What would you have done if you hadn't become a firefighter?

Be a paramedic at some ambulance service.

Eric Grayson to screen German Expressionist film

Film historian Eric Grayson will screen the 1920 film, Der Golem, on Saturday, July 16, 8 p.m. at the Garfield Park Arts Center. The film stars Paul Wegener and Lyda Salmonova. Q: If you had to pick one American cultural tradition or practice to eliminate, what would it be?

"Our cultural traditions have a lot of depth and history to them. I don't think any cultural tradition should be gotten rid of. What I think we have done to every one of them is commercialized them to the point where they have lost their meaning. You take Halloween for example, it is a beautiful respect for the dead and it comes out of a wonderful tradition. It has become so commercialized that it has lost that. It is all about the candy and the blow up balloons in people's yards. You can argue everything from birthdays to celebrating our parents and I think we have lost the true meaning of why we have these cultural practices because of the consumer practices."

Sister Sheila Fitzpatrick of Beech Grove

"Nealecting the US Constitution and Constitution Week. Constitution Week was started by President Eisenhower worked with the Daugthers of the American Revolution to make this holiday so that the liberties that the constitution provides are relearned. People hand out flags, copies of the Constitutions and have local businesses put up information about the articles, the priviledges and freedoms that Americans have. Many people do not understand the Constitution. This year the week is September 17-23."

Michelle Lupomech of Franklin Township

"It would be along Main Street in the common area where the new flowers have been planted. As I walk along I see a lot of debris and I think it should be up to the people to start pitching in and picking up the cigarette butts, trash, empty water bottles. That is what I would like to see."

FUNDRAISER

By Nicole Davis

The Trooper Bartram Memorial Foundation gave 137 children gifts to fulfill their Christmas wish list in 2015, with $150 spent per child. The Christmas for Kids program continues to grow. The 2016 Trooper Bartram Poker Run Memorial Ride on July 9 will help fund that need.

"You'll see all of these different (police) departments come together," said Kimberly (Bartram) Van Jelgerhuis, who travels from Florida to help organize the memorial ride and Christmas for Kids. "They will do anything they can to make sure those kids have a good Christmas. That day standing there and watching these officers come out for these kids it makes me humble... People ask me all the time, why do you do this? If you ever go at Christmas and look at these kids' faces, you don't have to ask that question again."

The ride begins at Southside Harley Davidson, 4930 Southport Crossing Pl., Indianapolis with registration 10 a.m. to 12 p.m. It ends at the American Legion Post in Fishers, 9091 E. 126th St. where dinner will be served with a State Police Troopers and Equipment Display, music, bike show, raffles, prizes, live and silent auction. The ride is open to motorcycles and antique cars. The ride costs $35 for a double rider and $20 for a single rider; police, firefighters and military receive a $5 discount.

"Everyone there wants to do good things, raise as much money as they can and they are a fun bunch to be around," said Jane Vaughn, of Perry Township, who attended > the dinner last year and will ride this year with her husband, Southport Police Chief Thomas Vaughn. "You can see that everyone wants to raise money for this because it's such a good cause."

> The events, the ride and Christmas for Kids, are in memory of Indiana State Trooper Pat Bartram who was killed in the line of duty in 1998. Trooper Bartram was actively involved in Shop With a Cop in Mooresville every year. A fifth degree black belt, he attended Mt. Gilead Church where he would volunteer to give free karate lessons to children.

"He would be horrified that this is in his name," Van Jelgerhuis. "He was a very private person. People don't realize that the officers aren't officers for the glory. They do it because they love their job and care to serve and protect us. They believe in what they do. They don't want the recognition. It's again very humbling to have this program named after my brother and have the opportunity to give back."

Darkness falls: Paranormal investigator's journey

"Darkness

brings about a realization that we are perhaps out of our element; and the feeling of being

small and alone."

HAUNTS & JAUNTS

By Rick Hinton

A paranormal investigator's journey, thus far, into a world of darkness:

The southern Kentucky region introduced an inquisitive youth to a realm of possibilities. The ghost stories of family members only added fuel to the fire. -And there was the darkness...thick and heavy without the benefit of city lights. What is it about a rural countryside setting locked firmly in the grasp of a summer night, where crickets sing out across rolling fields of tobacco and armies of fireflies appear as late afternoon surrenders into the grasp of the night? Was it the story from my mother about the apparition of her deceased sister on the gravel road across from my grandparent's house? Was it my grandmother's reluctance to talk about it? Or, was it the lone streetlight illumination across the front lawn, creating a defined boundary between darkness and light?

The Grand Canyon in Arizona—where a lad in his early 20s discovered the West that he had only seen from John Wayne movies. There was the darkness! We learned very early to sojourn during the hot daylight hours and then do our hiking at night when it was cooler. On most occasions I would take the lead, sometimes by a mile or so. I was alone, hiking by the light of the moon. The darkness brought out an eerie quiet. It gave me solitary time to ponder on this foreign world of shadows and mystery. I moved through a landscape of desert, pink rattlesnakes, cactus, and tall dark shadows that followed me in my peripheral vision. It was also my introduction to UFOs as they ping-ponged an irregular route across the horizon.

During my years in Oregon I had the opportunity to spend a lot of time in the mountains. It was during those nighttime explorations I realized a different world after the sun set. It's amazing how childlike emotions reemerge as a result of the flickering flames of a campfire illuminating a narrow expanse of surrounding tree line, leaving the sounds of trampled brush, fallen branches, and glowing eyes just out of our reach in the blackness.

Darkness brings about a realization that we are perhaps out of our element; and the feeling of being small and alone. A life of possibilities occasionally reveals themselves in small glimpses of insight. These glimpses can make a profound statement!

Ghosts, spirits, goblins, Bigfoot, and UFOs all seem to coexist in the world of darkness. It is their time to come out and play! And, perhaps our time to observe....

Indy Thunder Beep Ball has had its best season of the decade, finishing 11 - 1. Now they're heading to the National Beep Baseball Association World Series in Ames, Iowa. Founder and Coach Darnell Booker said they have a good team with strong players, such as Franklin Township resident Erik Rodriguez, who will work together to hopefully lead them to victory.

Beep Baseball is a game designed for those who are blind or visually impaired.

"This is an opportunity for me to play baseball again," Erik said. "It's filling that void of what I love to do, and it's just as fun... I like the team atmosphere. A lot of people that lose their vision, they don't get the opportunity to be a part of something that's like a team. They'll work as an individual or a small group. This gives you the chance to be a part of a full baseball team. That's what I love more than anything is the family-like atmosphere."

Erik was born in Merrillville, Ind. He has glaucoma and a hereditary condition called Stickler Syndrome which caused his eyesight to deteriorate. As a toddler, he was being taken to Chicago every week for doctors' visits and eye surgeries. The family moved to Indianapolis to be able to take him to Riley Hospital.

Now 16, he is a junior at Franklin Central High School. His vision is 20/400. In the U.S., any person with vision which cannot be corrected to better than 20/200 is considered legally blind.

Erik attended Indianapolis School for the Blind & Visually Impaired until his freshman year of high school, where he met Booker, a former teacher there. Erik used to participate in little league baseball until his vision worsened to the point that he could no longer play.

He began playing Beep Baseball with a team in Chicago four years ago. Two years ago he joined Indy Thunder. Erik's brother, Tyler, also plays on Indy Thunder.

"I credit (Erik's) coaching in Chicago," Booker said. "He got a lot of good coaching and has carried it over to playing with us. He's a good player, both offensively and defensively. He's a table setter for our team. Being that young, at 16, that's pretty remarkable."

A game of Beep Baseball lasts six innings with three outs per inning. The pitcher and batter are on the same team. The pitcher calls out when they are throwing the beeping ball so the batter knows when to swing. A batter is allowed four strikes. There are only two bases, which buzz when activated. When the ball is hit, the runner must identify which base to run to before the ball is fielded by a defensive player. The runner will often dive onto the base to make it safely in time. If the runner is safe, Erik Rodriguez playing beep ball with Indy Thunder. a run is scored.

"Baseball, I breathed and lived it," Erik said. "It was the best thing in the world to me. I found this and I can say honestly I like this a lot more than I liked baseball. There's something about it that makes you want to keep coming out."

Erik said he also likes to play goalball, a Paralympic sport similar to soccer for blind and visually impaired athletes. He said when he finishes high school, his goal is to obtain a personal trainer's license and one day open his own gym.

In addition to the 11 - 1season, Indy Thunder won its own Indianapolis tourna-

"We have a really good chance of bringing the World Series back to Indy if we do what we're supposed to do," Booker said. "We are a good hitting ball team; we just have to work on our defense. We're a really good team. We reach out to all parts of the city, north, east, west and south. It starts at the top with our culture. We have an understanding that you never know who's watching. How you carry yourself on and off the field matters."

He continued, "(Erik) gets the team fired up on defense. He's not real boisterous. He leads quietly by example. He says a few words but not much. He lets his plays do the talking."

Indy Thunder will have one more inner-squad game, open to the public, on July 9, 11 a.m. at Park Tudor School, 7200 N. College Ave., Indianapolis. The team, which leaves for the World Series on July 23, is still fundraising for the trip. Those interested in donating can email Booker at bookerd 23@yahoo.com or visit thunderbeepball.org for more information.

As the summer moves along quicker than many of us would desire, it's not too late to get into the summer fun. For those who are staying home with their children, encouraging reading during the lazy summer days is, in our opinion, one of the best ways to keep youth busy while sneaking in some education.

The Indianapolis Public Library sent an email saying it's not too late to get into the Summer Reading Program. What's better than getting your kids to read than awarding them for doing so? Participants can register the IndyPL's 2016 Summer Reading Program, "The Summer Reading Book Bash," at any Southside IndyPL location, including the Beech Grove Branch Library, through Saturday, July 30. Readers seeking greater point rewards can choose from a list of notable Bonus Books that pay tribute to our Hoosier heritage, with many titles featuring an Indiana connection. Among other prizes to earn are tickets to an Indianapolis Indians game, including Library Night at Victory Field on July 18, 7 p.m. sponsored by Finish Line Youth Foundation. Participants also can enter to win a giveaway drawing for two, 529 college savings accounts worth $529 each, sponsored by CollegeChoice CD 529 Savings Plan. These 529 college savings accounts are FDIC-insured through College Savings Bank, a Division of NexBank SSB.

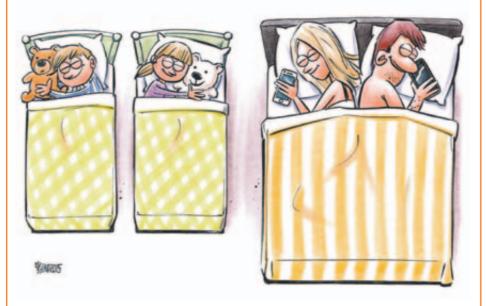

No matter what you're doing this summer, we hope everyone takes some time to stop and enjoy it!

Top ten ways kids have it worse today than I had it growing up

By Torry Stiles

- 10. They can never assume that at least one of Billy Smith's parents is a Mr. Smith.
- 9. When the cruddy TV shows came on there were no more channels to switch to - we went outside to play.

- 8. Being "hot for the teacher" was a fantasy, not a news item.
- 7. All we needed was a garden hose and a convenient tree and we could play outdoors all day.
- 6. When someone died we just had to feel guilty for stuff we said. Kids these days have to go back and edit their Facebook pages.
- 5. Cell phone cameras weren't around for most of my dumb mistakes.
- 4. Mopeds and mini-bikes were cool and not just evidence of a DUI.
- 3. There was more concern over who was smoking in the bathrooms than there was over who was videotaping stuff in the bathrooms.
- 2. Last names had a lot fewer hyphens in my day.
- 1. I grew up being taught never to ride with strangers. I taught my kids never to hook up with strangers over the internet. Now they have Lyft and Uber that use the internet get you a ride with a stranger.

QUOTE OF THE WEEK

"The secret message communicated to most young people today by the society around them is that they are not needed, that the society will run itself quite nicely until they - at some distant point in the future - will take over the reigns. Yet the fact is that the society is not running itself nicely... because the rest of us need all the energy, brains, imagination and talent that young people can bring to bear down on our difficulties. For society to attempt to solve its desperate problems without the full participation of even very young people is imbecile."

Working this summer for a healthier Indiana

GUEST COLUMNIST

The summer and fall months, also known as the interim, give lawmakers a chance to prepare for the upcoming legislative session. By conducting summer study committee hearings, members of the General Assembly are able to examine and review some of the most pressing issues facing Indiana. The Legislative Council, which is made up of 16 Indiana House and Senate members, recently assigned topics to be explored in-depth by these committees. As we move forward on key issues, committee members will work to recommend legislation to be considered for new laws next session.

I will be serving as chair of the Interim Study Committee on Public Health, Behavioral Health and Human Services. As chair, I will lead fellow members in discussions on how to curb heroin use and get more Hoosiers into recovery. During the last session, we successfully passed legislation to help reduce fatal drug overdoses by permitting pharmacies to sell overdose intervention drugs, like Narcan, over-the-counter without a prescription. Another piece of legislation requires Medicaid coverage for inpatient detoxification for the treatment of opioid or alcohol dependence is also now in effect.

By building on what we accomplished during session, I will continue to make progress toward overcoming our state's devastating drug problem. I am looking forward to working with my colleagues from both sides of the aisle in order to come up with long-term solutions.

Interim study committee hearings, which typically occur at the Statehouse in Indianapolis, can be viewed live online at iga. in.gov. This site also provides committee calendars and meeting agendas. Members of the public are also welcomed to attend. If you have any input on the topics, please join us for these meetings.

As we continue to lead Indiana forward, please contact me with questions or input at (317) 232-9793 or by email ath89@iga. in.gov. You can also learn more about the work being done on your behalf by signing up to receive my email updates at www. in.gov/h89.

Getting to know Erica...

- I like to play sports, work out, eat, go to the park and animals.
- When I was younger, I played sports overseas as a sports ambassador: volleyball and basketball. I played basketball for the Marines.
- · A personal achievement, I bypassed spinal surgery by getting my core strong and working out.

How did Erica do it?

Best advice: Be passionate about what you're doing and believe in it.

Worst advice: When I first started the food truck, I was told it was a horrible idea to have a healthy food truck in Indiana, that no one wants a fruit and veggie smoothie and it will never work Best Business Decision: To take some risk. I'm very by the book. Going with faith and believing in what I am trying to accomplish. For 2016, I said I'd take more risk and get my message across.

In 5 years: I would like to have a couple more restaurants or food trucks throughout Indi-

Erica Bryant creates fun, healthy ways for people to eat better through The Healthy Food Café

By Nicole Davis

"Organic" food doesn't have a different taste. Healthy food doesn't have to taste bad or bland. Erica Bryant is working on changing people's mindsets on what it means to eat healthy and be healthy.

Through The Healthy Food Café, 8028 S. Emerson Ave., Suite F, which she and her fiancé, Kennedy, opened in June, they serve everything from pizzas and hot dogs to salads and smoothies, also offering meal plans and advice.

"Indianapolis is the number one unhealthiest city in the nation," Bryant said. "I was trying to make an easy, convenient, fun way for people to get healthy. I will stay right here on the Southside and get the Southside healthier."

Growing up in Fort Wayne, Bryant joined the Navy just after high school. She left after serving 9 years, assigned to the medical field.

"I broke my spike (on the ship)," she said. "They wanted to replace four of my vertebras. I couldn't walk. I was paralyzed for a little bit. I didn't do any surgeries. It's been 9 years now. It hurts still, Erica Bryant with her daughter, Keziah. but I still haven't gone through any sur-

After leaving the military, she moved from California to New Jersey before coming to Perry Township in Indianapolis in 2011. She worked as a medical assistant at the St. Vincent Heart Hospital and as a personal trainer.

"The main motivation for the restaurant and eating healthy is with my background in the medical field, trying to get people stronger and healthier," she said. "Get people to stick with routines and make

Bryant had the opportunity to open a food truck nearly four years ago, and jumped on the chance to offer healthy food to people in and around Indianapolis.

"Being in the military, food trucks would come on the base and I loved it. It was always greasy stuff," she said. "With me being a personal trainer, I was doing meal preps, plans. I wanted to have the truck to get around to more people."

She continued, "I tried to reach out to other business owners, restaurant owners. One hundred percent of the people told me it was not a good idea to have a healthy food truck, that I needed to stick with the common things food trucks have."

Business was slow to start, with the health craze not as large as it is currently.

"My clients and fit family have been my support system," she said. "I kept pushing it and word of mouth. I've been doing farmer's markets, going downtown to the circle, doing school events and fundraisers. Now I get calls every week with people wanting the healthy food truck. It completely shifted."

Bryant opened a gym, Core 9 Fitness Center at 5153 Commerce Square Dr., Suite B, a year and a half ago, and says business is doing well. Right now she's focusing on hosting group training classes and hopes to hire more trainers to help clients one-on-one.

Needing to rent out a kitchen to have a commissary for her food truck, she said it made sense to start her own restaurant. The Healthy Food Café celebrated its grand opening on June 23. It's open seven days a week, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Bryant operates the café during its open hours then trains at the gym in the evenings.

"I love doing this," she said. "I like cooking for people. I like coming up with workout plans."

The Healthy Food Café offers salads, burritos, subs, nachos, "fit bowls" made of brown rice, pasta or quinoa, soups, smoothies and more. Everything is customizable. Bryant also offers prepared food to accompany her meal plans. The shop has a "blender bike," a stationary bicycle with an attachment for a blender so people can pedal to make their own smoothies.

"I like to eat. Through me, my clients, fiancé and family, we picked the foods that we love and we put a healthy spin on it," she said. "He even does cheesecakes. It's low-fat cheesecake and organic. We have gluten-free desserts."

There is even a separate kids menu set up like the adult menu where children can create their own meal. Bryant's daughter, Keziah, age 9, is often with her at work in the shop.

"It's awesome," Keziah said. "I love smoothies. I like the cookie monster and mango crush. In food I like the pasta and the (kosher) hot dogs."

Bryant said she hopes to grow the restaurant and be successful by offering quality food, being honest and open and having a good support system behind her.

PERSONNEL MATTERS

Does volunteering improve your employees' performance?

By Mike Heffner

Whether a team of your employees helped build a home with Habitat for Humanity or sorted canned goods at an area food bank, they helped make a difference in your community. This involvement also shows your company's commitment to social responsibility and, as business leaders, I think it's important that we invest back into our community. I have also experienced that when our team gets involved, it strengthens office camaraderie, enhances employee professional development and raises the level of employee engagement.

I did some homework on this topic and a study by UnitedHealth Group revealed that 64 percent of employees who volunteer say that volunteering alongside their colleagues strengthens their relationships in the workplace. An almost unanimous 96 percent agree that the experience enriches their purpose in life and gives them a deeper connection to their communities and to others.

Service in the community can also mean doing pro bono work or helping with a local Chamber of Commerce by serving as a board member or committee member. This kind of volunteer opportunity allows employees to feel empowered to help solve real local community problems, while developing professional and leadership skills that can be used in the workplace.

My advice if you want to foster employee involvement in the community is to sit down with your team and find out what they are passionate about, then establish goals and provide direction around the time and personal commitment required. Then follow up with them to see how they are progressing and share their success with the team.

Local festivals raise funds for nonprofits

By Howard Hubler

My wife and I just finished a fun-filled, action-packed time at the Indianapolis Zoo's annual Zoobilation. Zoobilation has got to be the grandfather of all parties for businessmen and nonprofits. If you take the setting of the zoo, the variety of all the food, the bands and put them all in one spot for one night, crank the thermostat up to 95° and put in a couple thousand men wearing tuxedos and jackets with star-studded women, then you have a blend for a get-down-and-dirty rock 'n' roll hoochie coo. If you are under 30, don't worry about what that is.

We have a couple of stores in a couple of small towns. Crawfordsville just wrapped up its annual strawberry festival. In that small community, 15,000 people are crammed into four acres to eat strawberries and ice cream. Each of the staff at Christi Hubler Chevrolet must've gained a pound over the weekend.

By time this article goes to press, at Greg Hubler Chevrolet in Mooresville, many will go out to Main Street for a huge New Orleans type fest with authentic New Orleans food including flown-in crawfish by the barrel full. If you get online and look at the various places to search for summer festivals, they are virtually everywhere in Indiana.

Here's my point: Every year, nonprofits catch their economic breath by having huge festivals that are sponsored by and large by local business men and women who are on their boards throughout the calendar year. But when the appointed time comes for the big summer festival, they make as much money over a long weekend as they may make all year long combined.

It wouldn't be so exciting to me but this is capitalism at its best. Yes, Hillary, it takes a village to eat strawberries, but the government need not get involved in our ability to have fun and raise funds to make our communities better.

Wealth at the wall

By Andrew Angle

I could be wrong, but I do wonder if this is what the Great Wall of Mexico is really about. (Hint: It's NOT about immigration.)

Trump is in the construction business. The art of his deals is in maximizing his slice of the revenues while minimizing his tie to the liabilities. So, he runs for President on a promise of building the largest structure since the Great Wall of China. Who actually pays for it might be secondary to ensuring that the legislation enables him to personally profit from its construction.

Using Presidential authority he could toughen immigration laws and enforcement, rounding up more illegals than ever. Rather than immediate deportation, they are sent to camps on the border where they are ordered to work on building the very wall that is intended to keep "their kind" out. As with Indiana's prisons, the labor camps and construction contractors are for-profit companies. In this case, a key shareholder secured behind opaque layers of corporate veils will be Donald Trump himself. He gets paid. The workers don't.

It's a reasonable bet that a portion of the loot that ultimately gets paid for the construction, from labor to materials, will trickle into an account that Trump owns. You can bet further that whatever legislation is in place to restrict such conflicts of interest will be placed under fire while the mogul is in office.

If Trump's top concern is job preservation, wouldn't he be focused on restricting "virtual" undocumented immigration in the form of offshore outsourcing? Our government incentivizes companies to hire non-US citizens who are not on US soil. Not only are such workers cheaper wage-wise, there are no government forms to be filed and no taxes to pay. A good dealmaker like Trump knows that, and is making a mint from it. Chances are whatever legislation Trump's enterprise profits from will remain in effect while he is the boss. In this election, the same can be assumed about his rival, Hillary.

All things craft

Tonya Minth turns her passion for crafting and customer service into The Glitterie Boutique in Greenwood

The Glitterie

1211 N. Madison Ave. Suite F

Greenwood, IN 46142 (317) 882-8149

theglitterieboutique.com

Compiled by Nicole Davis

It started with a bed-and-breakfast designed for crafty travelers. As Tonya Minth's love for all things craft grew, she knew it was time to move the gift shop out of her Beech Grove home and begin her own store. She opened The Glitterie in Greenwood in September.

Tonya sells everything from crafting supplies to bath and beauty products, purses and bags, finished handcrafts, candles, home décor and florals in the 5,000 square foot store. There is a space for classes, where artists will come and teach regularly. Upcoming events can be found at theglitterieboutique.com.

"I tell people this is my happy place and it can be your happy place, too," she said. "I love having ladies come and visit. You don't have to shop for anything. You can just bring your crafts and work."

Tonya said she would love to have a café in the shop in the future, and is working on the logistics of doing so. Right now, she's working on having a sign hung on the storefront of her business, located across the street from Greenwood Park Mall on Madison Avenue.

Why did you open this business?

I was working a "real" job. I've had several great jobs. I worked at the Beech Grove Public Library. I was their marketing director, managed their café and gift shop and did everything that wasn't a book. I got hooked on the gift shop and café — I liked it more than everything else. In the back of my mind, I thought I'd love to have my own café or gift shop... I went into my next job as an activities director at St. Paul Hermitage. I was catering to the residents. I love to feed people. One thing led to another. When I got to the point the last child was leaving the nest, I said maybe it was time to do me. My husband was very supportive. I had been dabbling at the house with the B&B. I wanted more space.

What did you do to prepare for opening your business?

This place had been empty since Forget Me Not left. I did lots of cleaning and called in lots of favors. It's not that glamorous. It was a lot of hard work, saving money.

Who is your ideal customer/client?

Anyone who has a passion for creating. The word crafting is such a broad word. Anyone who feels like the need to do something – whether that's paper crafting, painting, mixed media or needlework.

How do you plan to be successful?

I do attend trade shows and belong to the Craft & Hobby Association. But really you just have to stay current in your market, know what's trending and get to know your customers.

What would we be surprised to learn about you or your company?

I am the biggest, most insane Elvis fan you've ever known. I do occasionally play Elvis music here, but you're lucky if I don't have Elvis on all of the time.

The Purge: Election Year... highly, enjoyable third entry

MOVIE REVIEW

By Adam Staten

Election season is almost upon us once again. Both major party conventions fall in July, meaning both Republicans and Democrats will trot out speakers aiming to convince voters that their candidate will make all your wildest dreams come true. Having an opinion on topics that affect our everyday lives is important. However, profanely and combatively expressing them on social media isn't likely to change many minds. One new film, The Purge: Election Year, takes a slightly more subtle approach of expressing its political views.

The Purge: Election Year, the third film in the series that plays on the idea that all crime including murder is legal for a 12-hour period, takes aim at politics and politicians, literally. The film centers on two candidates running for President of the United States; one feels the annual purge is a necessary evil needed in order for society to run effectively. However, the other candidate, Senator Roan, who had an unfortunate brush with the purge in her past, vows to end the deadly and violent tradition if elected.

Minutes after the commencement of the annual night of purging the senator finds herself dodging bullets from those hoping to put an end to her campaign. She soon finds the only person she can trust is her head of security, Leo Barnes. After successfully evading hired assassins, at least for the time, Senator Roan and Barnes come across a group of unlikely allies hiding out in a convenience store. Soon Roan and Barnes find themselves in a seemingly suicidal plot to end the purge that night with a lot more firepower than diplomacy.

As with most horror sequels, everything in The Purge: Election Year is amped up a fair bit more than the two prior films in the franchise. There's more violence, language, and a more apparent political message. However, the film manages to stay interesting and exciting, never feeling tired or worn out. While it may have a similar message like the first two, coming at it with come a different angle, with new characters, helps it keep a sense of freshness and newness.

Even with a story that keeps you entertained, there are some definite weak spots. The film could have easily been 10-15 minutes shorter and some of the dialogue is badly written, with characters saying things that can obviously been seen on screen. Show, don't tell.

The Purge: Election Year, much like its two predecessors, has a very overt political message and point of view. While its not likely to be everybody's cup of tea, those who enjoyed the first two films are bound to enjoy this new entry in the franchise. 3.5 out of 5.

Ethos, pathos and logos hit the campaign trail

GRAMMAR GUY

By Jordan Fischer

Good news for those of you out there in Grammar Land: the Grammar Guy is back from his hiatus and ready to talk politics (sort of).

Generally, holding the position of Grammar Guy in as high esteem as I do, I try to stay above the fray. But now that election season has roared upon us with all its sound and fury, even I can't resist a few steps on the campaign trail.

Don't worry: We're not going to be spell-checking campaign mailers or critiquing candidates on their subject-verb agreement. We're going deeper. So grab your copy of Aristotle's "Rhetoric" and prepare to talk about the art of persuasion.

If ethos, pathos and logos sound like characters from the Three Musketeers ... then you're surprisingly well-read for someone who's not familiar with the modes of persua-

First put to page by Aristotle in the 4th Century BC, the modes of persuasion (ethos, pathos and logos) are how speakers appeal to their audiences. I'll let the man himself do the introductions:

"Of the modes of persuasion furnished by the spoken word there are three kinds. [...] Persuasion is achieved by the speaker's personal character when the speech was so spoken as to make us think him credible (Ethos). [...] Secondly, persuasion may come through the hearers, when the speech stirs their emotions (Pathos). [...] Thirdly, persuasion is effected through the speech itself when we have proved a truth or an apparent truth by means of the persuasive arguments suitable to the case in question (Logos)."

Repackaging that for this century, ethos is an appeal to authority – specifically the speaker's. It can come from expertise, from an elected position or just inherent goodness.

The important thing is that the speaker has authority and you should listen to him/her because of it.

Pathos is an appeal to emotion. If you're a fan of the Simpsons, you'll recognize pathos in Helen Lovejoy's frequent, handwringing appeals for "somebody to please think of the children." Won't you?

Logos is the appeal to logic – and it's often the least effective mode. If you'd like to understand why, consider that Airborne – the popular Vitamin C supplement – made its parent company $70 million between 2011 and 2012 – a full three years after the makers admitted in a $23 million class-action lawsuit that there was "no competent and reliable scientific evidence" to support its health claims. As of the writing of this article, a bottle of 75 Airborne gummies goes for $23.75 on Amazon.

Coming up next week: "Ethos, or: Why people should listen to me."

juicy summer berry deliciousness offer a lot more than sweet flavor. They're brilliant gems of God's love vibrating with a kaleidoscopic of nurturing plant vitamins. Has your light dimmed; sleepwalking, unable to sing your heart's song?

Each cell that creates you holds the key to the sacred gift perfect health, happiness and wholeness. When you feed your trillions of cells from the celestial apothecary, the budding flower of perfect health willingly opens. When you're vitamin deficient and sick; not so much. Let's visit the berry patch.

All edible berries have a low glycemic index, loaded with fiber, help prevent cancer and heart disease, urinary tract infections, protect the brain from stroke damage, protect DNA and improve eyesight. American Journal of Clinical Nutrition say Anthocyanins are the big star of the berry show. Anthocyanins are pigments responsible for the dark skin colors and may help prevent cardiovascular disorders, inflammatory responses, cancer, heart disease, improve cognitive brain functions and improve eye health too.

One cup of heavenly blueberries has the antioxidant power of five servings of peas, carrots, apples, squash or broccoli. The Archives of Ophthalmology say three or more servings of berries or fruit per day can decrease the possibility of contracting age-related macular degeneration by 36 percent.

Raspberries pop with Vitamin C, magnesium, folate, B 12 and B 3. Blackberries are the most superior antioxidant-rich food. Gooseberries have significantly high amounts of phenolic phytochemicals, especially flavones and anthocyanins. Both of these compounds have been found to have numerous health-benefiting effects against cancer, aging, inflammation, and neurological diseases. The green gifts contain moderate levels of minerals such as copper, calcium, phosphorus, manganese, magnesium and potassium. Miracles your Blueberry Poop Tart cannot lay claim.

To retain their physical integrity, only wash them right before you want to eat them. Be gentle with the delicate, albeit mighty little gems. When possible, purchase berries from local farmer markets during the growing season.

Raw is the best to preserve the powerful vitamins. Cooking destroys the Anthocyanins. Adding fresh, vibrant berries to pancake, muffin batter, or fruit pie taste good, but you may as well eat the container they came in. You see, that's' the problem today. Unfulfilled angry Americans, disconnected from their earth are programmed to eat dead food. It's heartbreaking to watch.

Berry Up! Open your gift, return to wholeness and shine your light. (Come see me at the Garfield Park Farmer's Market this weekend from 9:30 a.m. -12:30 p.m.)

Weekly Devotion

"Jesus saith unto him, Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed: blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed." ~ John 20:29

Believing without seeing. I have been a Christian for over 65 years. The reason that I can make that statement is because I believed even though I had not seen. When my pastor back then told me about the life and the death and the resurrection of Christ, I believed. When my Sunday School teachers told me the same thing, I believed. I am talking about believing unto salvation and not just believing that there might just be some merit to the story of Jesus as it is told in the

The problem is, as we age we become skeptics. That is true most of the time about most of the people. Children don't really present us with a problem when it comes to telling them the story of Jesus. They readily accept it and put their faith in it. But, if they don't go further and become Christians, they will lose their confidence in Jesus. Life begins to bring to their lives disappointments and discouragements. If their minds are not filled with the Words of God, they become and empty field in which Satan can come sow his "tares." This is where most parents fail their children. They leave them with nothing to believe. There are no daily conversations about God or Jesus or the Holy Spirit or the Bible.

I have never seen Jesus in the flesh glorified or otherwise but I believe He is and that He is my Savior because He went to the cross to save me. Save ME! He did it for me! You can say the same thing for yourself because it is as true for you as it is for me. Hallelujah! God bless and go and have a great day.

Paul A. Kirby is the pastor at the Church of God at 3939 S. Emerson Ave.
