Topics in History: History through Film

A Southport student review of the 2015 movie Straight Outta Compton

FEATURE

Topics is a course at Southport High School taught by Kevin Sanders that analyzes major events from United States and world history through Hollywood films that attempt to portray those events. Students investigate historical documents and other sources to determine if a film is historically accurate.

The goal is for students to develop deeper understandings of the historical discipline while generating questions about the way the world is around them, along with watching classical films that have graced American and international screens.

Student: Timmie Roome III Film Reviewed: Straight Outta Compton

I believe Straight Outta Compton is a phenomenal film because it really shows the power of a group. In addition, the film's themes include friendships that don't always last forever; cherish those moments when you are with them because you never know when they might end.

During this movie, Dr. Dre, Eazy-E and Ice Cube create NWA, a rap group that expresses racism and discrimination that African Americans experienced. They decided to be one big group and make music to get a large following. They added more people to the group, like MC Ren, Dj Yella, etc.

They are on the rise and are gaining popularity fast. Eazy-E, debatably the most popular of the group at the time, runs into a manager named Jerry Heller who ultimately wants to sign Eazy-E and make his career bigger than they ever imagined. He agrees to hire him, and the group starts making noise around the country.

Everything was going well; they were the talk of the town and on top and couldn't be stopped until the end of the tour they completed. Ice Cube was unhappy with his payment plans and believed that he was being scammed and tried to convince Eazy-E to fire Jerry or tell him to give him more money. Nothing changed so Ice Cube decided to split from the group, going independent. He later gets screwed over in the future at his new record label; so much that he destroys the owner's office and demands his money.

Everyone else is still together, and they release more music. They diss songs back and forth until bodyguard-turned label boss Marion "Suge" Knight tells Dr. Dre to look into the contract Jerry had with him. They looked through it and realized that Jerry was scamming Dre.

Dre then confronts Eazy-E and tries to get him to fire Jerry, but Eazy-E doesn't budge, so Dre makes a group named Death Row Records. (Dre eventually splits with them to become an independent artist.)

Time goes by, and Eazy-E is basically alone with Jerry. He then decides to look into his contract, and he discovers he is getting scammed again. He fires Jerry, then calls up Dre and Ice Cube to see if they wanted to collaborate again.

Once they pick a day to meet, Eazy-E is ill; he is admitted to the hospital and diagnosed with HIV. Everyone is heartbroken by the news. Eazy-E later dies of AIDS without having that connection with Ice Cube and Dre once again.

According to nfi.edu, apparatus theory suggests all films reflect reality in some way. It declares that every film element has meaning. People who believe in apparatus theory think they can learn more about a film's meaning by analyzing the meaning of its elements.

In this film, this is demonstrated in many ways. It shows the way groups come together; they sometimes work out and sometimes don't and shows the rise of the NWA group and how they were slowly falling apart. Later on they realize they should've stayed together. Everyone had to bear that pain. Unfortunately, when Eazy-E passes away, they don't have that chance to group again. It shows how people should really think about and cherish the moments they have with each other. Along with this, it shows how powerful you can be with the right group of people.

Another example of the apparatus theory is when the movie shows the original NWA group, the way it shows them going into the booth and putting their all into the music; their fans actually liked what they were listening to. The group would go out and try to book shows even though a lot of people believed them to be harmful and bad for people to listen to. Many people tried to stop them, but they pushed through and kept doing what they thought was right. I believe they did the right thing though; they made sure to not let the media and the people who dislike them get in their head and stop the path they were taking. They showed that you need to just go out and try and not worry about the outcome; just do what makes you happy.

Maddie Wells, 18, learned how to design, choose fabric and sew a costume.

Finding success through creativity

Greenwood High School students discover new career paths through independent research class

By Sherri Coner

Thinking outside of the box

By encouraging his students to think far away from that proverbial box, Greenwood High School teacher Kevin Leineweber has watched all six members of his independent research class delve into their interests, develop analytical and research skills and build confidence.

"Many previous students tell me this class and their projects made a huge positive impact on them finishing up high school and being successful at college," Leinweber said of the class he has offered since joining the Greenwood faculty two years ago.

First, Leineweber spends one-on-one time with each student to guide them toward project decisions. Students identify a project encompassing their interests along with necessary steps to successfully gather all necessary information to complete the project.

As vast as student interests always are in the class, their skill-building experiences are equally as vast.

They polish email writing and telephone skills to reach out and be taken seriously by professionals in the field they want to study. Some students shadow professionals in their particular field of study.

Inspiring career paths

Because John Gries, 18, plans to study mechanical engineering at Rose-Hulman

Kevin Leineweber

Institute of Technology, he conducted research, spoke to professionals and created an engine design.

He then produced engine parts with a 3D printer.

"I have to sand down all these clear parts," Gries said. "They are clear, so I can see the other parts in the engine."

As a devoted reader and a serious artist, Abigail Schout, 18, merged both passions for her project.

First, she wrote a book entitled "The Beauty In the Darkness."

"It has a fantasy, futuristic vibe," Schout said.

She then created main character illustrations.

When her book was published, "I was very, very proud," she said.

When Lily Howe, 18, fell in love with Bob Ross videos, she also discovered a love for painting.

"I really love to paint mountains," Howe said. "I also love to snow ski. I dream about going to ski in Switzerland."

For now, she imagines the Swiss Alps while creating mountain peaks on canvas.

"I have done three paintings," Howe said. "One with a mentor and the others alone. I've learned all about blending, and oil, watercolor and acrylic painting."

In the fall, Howe will study interior design at Purdue University.

Discovering what they love

"This project has helped me discover what I love," she said.

For more than a decade, Maddie Wells, 18, has studied dance.

"But the only sewing I ever did was on my pointe shoes for ballet," Wells said.

Designing her own dance costume for a solo performance, including choosing fabric and learning to sew was a huge learning curve, Wells said.

"I have a love-hate relationship with this," she said with a laugh. "Once I get the rhinestones and fringe on it, then it will be everything I want it to be."

Opening a dance studio of her own is Wells' dream.

"I think I want to also design my students' costumes," she said.

As he grinned at the odd contraption on a table top, Charlie Jackson, 18, said, "I put 500 hours into this. But it's been worth it."

After designing the green plastic track and learning how to utilize mechanical and electrical systems, Jackson created a 3D-printed automatic roller coaster. "I've been a nerd my entire life," he said. "I also love riding roller coasters and I also like problem-solving. I like the accomplishment."

In the fall, Jackson will attend the University of Southern Indiana.

With a longtime interest in writing, Mya Ayro, 17, penned a book she entitled "The Blooming of Arabella."

"I had a bunch of ideas at once, so it was a little bit hard to choose a path," she said.

Now that she is a published author, Ayro knows one career path that is absolutely not for her.

"I definitely don't want to be a writer," she said with a laugh. "I want to be a psychiatrist."

Trash Can Rescue Greenwood firefighter cleans trash cans for Southside residents

Bv Sherri Coner

Picture yourself walking outside on a hot, sunny day and finding a zillion bees swarming around your destination.

While swatting the bees away, you open the lid to add a bag of garbage and immediately gag. "Trash cans can get pretty stinky, especially in the summer," said Alex Scheidler. His appreciation for squeaky clean trash cans began in 2021.

While vacationing with his wife, Mackenzie, Alex was enjoying an alcoholic drink, puffing Greenwood firefighter Alex Scheidler and his on a cigar and relaxing.

But then a TikTok video about trash can Genevieve, 4 months. (Submitted Photo) cleaning caught his eye.

At the time, Alex was working as a roofer when he was not working at Greenwood Fire Department as a firefighter.

Logically, the idea seemed brilliant since most people have trash cans and few people, if any, love to clean them.

Plus, it was an opportunity to own a business that could accommodate his firehouse schedule.

"I did some research and found out that nobody in the Center Grove area offered that service," Alex said.

When the budding entrepreneur shared the business idea with his wife, Mackenzie, her response was almost as unpleasant as a germfilled trash can.

"She thought it was the dumbest thing she had ever heard," Alex said with a laugh.

After a lot more thinking and some serious conversations, Mackenzie changed her mind.

She also agreed to help her spouse with the business.

Purchasing quality equipment to provide quality work for customers was their first step. Alex hitched a trailer to his truck with a custom-made hopper, which made it possible to wife, Mackenzie with their children, Shay, 2, and haul 525 gallons of clean hot water at a temperature of 200 degrees and 400 gallons of dirty water which is then dumped at weigh stations.

"I do all the trash can cleaning and Mackenzie handles all the scheduling, information requests and quotes," Alex said.

Though he grew up in Center Grove, Alex currently resides in Martinsville with his wife and their two young children, Shay, 2, and fourmonth-old Genevieve.

Inspired by fire rescues, the business is called Trash Can Rescue, with clients all over Johnson County and the Southside, as well as Martinsville, Plainfield and Mooresville.

"It has really taken off a lot faster than I ever thought it would," Alex said of the business.

After working a 24-hour shift at the firehouse, this guy gets busy with nearly 50 trash can cleaning jobs every day.

"It's a new market," Alex said. "I don't think anyone wants to clean their stinky trash can themselves."

Garfield Park hosts heartwarming Arbor Day celebration: Sing for the Trees

Enthusiastic Southside residents embrace music and nature despite chilly weather

FEATURE

By Andrew Angle

In true Southside spirit, Indianapolis residents braved the cold and damp weather last Friday, April 28, to gather at Garfield Park for an Arbor Day celebration that warmed hearts and lifted spirits. Hosted by the Indiana Forest Alliance (IFA) and Song Squad Indianapolis, Sing for the Trees garnered local media attention, including coverage in newspapers, radio, TV, social media and online event calendars.

The celebration began with an oak tree seedling giveaway, but unfortunately, after a few hundred trees were given to Southsiders, the next large shipments of trees did not arrive as planned, causing supplies to run out before the event concluded. Despite this setback, the Southside community's enthusiasm remained unshaken, as attendees eagerly took part in the festivities and looked forward to contributing to the city's green spaces.

Pam Blevins Hinkle, co-founder of Song Squad Indianapolis, led the musical highlight of the event. Teaching her original composition, "Reciprocity," in a call-and-response style, the performance was a heartwarming and unifying experience for participants of all ages and backgrounds. Together, they raised their voices in harmony, celebrating the vital role trees play in our lives and environment.

The Arbor Day event not only drew people together but also inspired several attendees to join the IFA in their mission to protect and restore Indiana's native forests. As a first-time event for the organization, the positive response has fueled their ambition to host an even grander celebration next year.

Lori Perdue, the event coordinator, expressed her enthusiasm for the event's success: "The pressures on our environment are intensifying, and in response, we must strengthen our awareness, deepen our connections to urban forests and foster unity among one another. The success of this event reaffirms our dedication at IFA to preserve and protect the wild, wooded and green spaces of Indianapolis."

Since 1996, the Indiana Forest Alliance has championed the health and well-being of Indiana's native forests. The nonprofit serves a diverse range of citizens, organizations, landowners and communities, ensuring that accurate information reaches the people of Indiana and providing opportunities for input into decision-making processes that impact forests.

Our Southside urban forests are crucial to the Indianapolis community. Trees purify the air, reduce energy costs, provide habitats for wildlife and promote mental and physical well-being. By offering free tree seedlings and engaging the community in a shared musical experience, the IFA and the Sing for the Trees event highlighted the importance of preserving and expanding our urban forests.

Looking to the future, the Indiana Forest Alliance plans to build on this year's event success and continue their vital work of protecting and restoring Indiana's forests. If you're interested in supporting their efforts or would like to learn more, visit IndianaForestAlliance.org/sst.

As we reminisce on the Arbor Day Celebration: Sing for the Trees event, let us remember Pam Blevins Hinkle's lyrics from "Reciprocity": "rooted in the moment and reaching for each other and the dream." As a community, we have the power to protect our urban forests and create a greener, healthier and more sustainable future for all of Indianapolis.

PEER TO PEER You and me and Generation Z

By Howard Hubler

When does a "millennial" stop and Generation Z start? According to Pew Research Center, millennials are turning 38 this year. They are well into the prime of their jobs, they're highly focused and for the most part are good family people and well on the way to being Mr. & Mrs. Steady Eddie. If you were born after 1997, by many researchers' definition, you are a member of the Generation Z group. When they went through the pandemic, they were shut into their parents' home. A whole host of parentdependency articles written on Generation Z is tragically perplexing. Their dependency seems more like a high school child than somebody prepared for the workforce. For things like housing, food, transportation and education, they are still highly dependent upon their parents who are at the age where they should be saving for their own retirement, not supporting a college graduate child. To make matters worse, Gen Z parents seem to bow to many of their children's demands; it is somewhat a symbiotic relationship between parent and child.

According to a Fox News poll, in this potential future generation of our workforce, 39% lack meaningful technical skills. 37% lack motivation and another 37% are easily distracted. Thirty-five percent are easily offended. Twenty-four percent are dishonest and 21% have a strong sense of entitlement.

Hoosier businesspeople must understand this if they continue to grow their business with younger people. Gen Zs is interested in joining a leisure workforce. They are interested in working from home as much as possible. They are not particularly good at communication skills, such as selling a product face-to-face as is the millennial. What you took for granted on previous generations, you cannot take for granted on a Generation Z hiring interview.

Once we get them into the workplace and they feel comfortable, they will do well. Go online and research stories available on hiring Generation X kids. Apply those to your own unique business demands and you should do well. They're out there. Now get them.

Dungeons & Dragons: Honor Among Thieves Perfectly pleasant if unremarkable family entertainment

HONOR AMONG THIEVES

MOVIE REVIEW

By Bradley Lane

A live action film based on the massively popular Dungeons & Dragons tabletop role-playing game has been in the works for nearly a decade. This lengthy development period included a lawsuit over the film rights, multiple writers and scripts, and then finally a transition in the directorial team behind the film. Films like these have a reputation for being disjointed and fractured thanks to how many different perspectives and tones have been expressed on the way to making the completed project. Fortunately, the directing duo behind the finished film, Jonathan Goldstein and John Francis Daley, have managed to make something that feels fun even if it is familiar, and enjoyable, even if it isn't more than the sum of its parts.

Drawn from the mountains of lore established by the long-running TTRPG, Honor Among Thieves is a classic D&D story with a cinematic narrative twist. Like most D&D campaigns, it begins with a ragtag group of adventurers with competing motivations forming a tentative alliance to take down a shared enemy. What adds a new dimension of emotionality is our main protagonist Edgin's relationship with his estranged daughter, and his personal quest for redemption as he fights to regain her trust after his last heist went terribly wrong.

The reason to see the D&D movie is the excellent chemistry among its central cast members. Chris Pine, Michelle Rodriguez, Justice Smith and Sophia Lillas all have great comedic timing with one another that elevates what would be a by-the-numbers adventure comedy into something much more enjoyable. Additionally the action set pieces are filmed with an ambition that makes them stand head and shoulders above their Marvel Cinematic Universe-esque contemporaries. At the core of this film there is also a deep respect for the source material that tonally represents the same improvisational and chaotic fun that a great D&D campaign has in spades.

However, this is not a perfect film. Despite doing their best to make it all work together, the various different drafts of the script manifest a lack of cohesion that makes the story feel episodic and disconnected. Oftentimes it feels like the pace is racing from one box to check off to another which means it never outstays its welcome, but also doesn't give the audience time to really connect to the characters in a meaningful way.

What truly sets this apart from its contemporaries though, is that it has heart. This movie is a sincere expression of the joy that a game has provided players for decades and distinctly sets itself apart from its irony-soaked contemporaries. Dungeons & Dragons: Honor Among Thieves is now available to rent or buy on all VOD services.

Bradley is a Beech Grove High School alumnus and has been enamored by film for as long as he can remember. He recently graduated from IUPUI, with a degree in Media and Public Affairs with a minor in Film. Bradley can be contacted at blane2214@gmail.com.

50 shades of beige

GRAMMAR GUY

By Curtis Honeycutt

Remember the beige craze of the 2000s? If you wanted to sell your house, you'd paint the interior walls of your house "bashful beige," "autumn wheat," "tasteful tan," "totally taupe," or "burnt oatmeal." Yes, if your house had 50 shades of beige, you'd sell your house lickety-split.

Now light gray is all the rage. No more bland sand! Bring on the "faded fog," "shy shark" and "silver lining" shades. I don't know how it happened, but light gray became the neutral go-to of the mid-2010s to the present day.

While neutral colors have pleasant, easy-for-real-estate undertones, they can come across as dull and boring. When it comes to language, there's a term called "beige prose." If you recall, I explored "purple prose" in the past. Purple prose is an overly flowery language that uses tons of adjectives and words to describe something relatively simple.

Beige prose, on the other hand, is direct and is sometimes accused of being too plain. As a literary style, we have several notable examples.

I have to begin with my main man Ernest Hemingway, the father of anti-fluff writing. Instead of "beige" prose, he'd describe his writing style as "efficient and direct." In Hemingway's 1935 "Esquire" essay entitled "Notes on the Next War," he writes, "They wrote in the old days that it is sweet and fitting to die for one's country. But in modern war, there is nothing sweet nor fitting in your dying. You will die like a dog for no good reason."

You'll notice Hemingway is actually comparing the purple prose of the Victorian era with his own emerging style. No fluff here — just get-to-the-point honesty from Ernie.

If you want a modern example of beige prose, look no further than Suzanne Collins, author of "The Hunger Games." If you recall, I used "Twilight" author Stephenie Meyer as a modern purple prose-style writer. Meyer used an entire paragraph to describe vampire Edward's sparkly skin. Katniss and Peeta, on the other hand, get the beige prose treatment. "The Hunger Games" protagonist Katniss Everdeen describes her home life in a matter-of-fact way: "Sitting at Prim's knees, guarding her, is the world's ugliest cat. Mashed-in nose, half of one ear missing, eyes the color of rotting squash. Prim named him Buttercup, insisting that his muddy yellow coat matched the bright flower. He hates me. Or at least distrusts me."

Other notable pro-beige prose authors include Jack London, Cormac McCarthy, Kurt Vonnegut and Charles Bukowski. While I agree descriptive purple prose has some useful applications, I lean toward beige prose to keep the plot moving forward; otherwise, I feel like reading a novel feels like watching khaki paint dry.

2 TIMOTHY 4:2

Easter has passed and thoughts of our Risen

Savior fade from our mind's eve. We are inclined to shift our focus to events that lie ahead, like Mother's and Father's Day. This is a perfect time for a reminder that Easter is not the celebration of a single day. It is a celebration of a season known as "Eastertide." This season began following our journey through Lent, where Jesus entered the unforgiving wilderness alone to face the temptations of the devil. Jesus laid before us a path that led through Good Friday, where sin and the world's judgment were nailed to the cross. Those willing to pick up their cross and follow Jesus find in this day the ultimate victory over death, the devil, and Hell! Then comes Eastertide, which began Resurrection Sunday as we celebrated the evidence of eternal life beyond the grips of death! But the celebration doesn't end here. We are now walking in the days following the resurrection. During this portion of the season Jesus walked, talked and performed miracles to show the world evidence of a love and power from the Father above. He then ascended in a public display of God's glory to make a place within His father's mansion for us. He left us with a comforter on Pentecost, that we might know we are never alone and so that we would be reminded of the things Jesus taught us in His walk to and through the cross. As we walk through each day of our lives, be reminded to celebrate all the joys of this Eastertide season, and may our focus always be on the eternal joys that lie beyond!

God bless and go and have a great day.
