Music to soothe the soul

HAUNTS & JAUNTS

Bv: Rick Hinton

They say music soothes the soul. I agree that it does, also sparking moments of nostalgia. Song lyrics can take us back to an age and time when we first heard them and the emotional reaction it implanted within our soul. These feelings never really ever go away.

In the 1960s, my first 45 rpm record was Bobbie Gentry's, "Ode to Billie Joe." A tragic story of love found and lost in a world I did not yet understand. My second record was Tiny Tim's, "Tiptoe Through the Tulips." I remember my father staring in disbelief and shaking his head sadly when Tiny hit the high falsettos. My mother belonged to a record club, and I listened to Glen Campbell's, "By the Time I get to Phoenix" and "Wichita Lineman," which became a staple of daily play.

In the summer, I would wash the dishes while listening to Marvin Gaye's, "What's Going On" and "Mercy Mercy Me." This became a rite of passage as I learned more about the world around me. High school in the early 1970s at Warren Central presented another opportunity - an underground radio station built from scratch from purchases at Eastgate's Radio Shack. On weekends, we would broadcast from my friend Tom's bedroom, eventually reaching a 15-mile radius. The upbeat "One Toke Over the Line" by Brewer & Shipley was one I did not understand initially but eventually did.

During those high school days, a personal revelation manifested - one of lost love, teenage angst and the dawning that it was a big, mysterious world out there: Carole King's, "It's Too Late"; Linda Ronstadt's, "Long Long Time"; The Gentry's, "Wild World" (a Cat Stevens song); The Carpenters, "Superstar"; Bread's, "If and Guitar Man"; Gordon Lightfoot's, "If You Could Read My Mind"; and the Who's political anthem, "Won't Get Fooled Again."

When I moved to Oregon in the late 1970s, music continued to influence my psyche: Jerry Rafferty's, "Get it Right Next Time"; Supertramp's, "Take the Long Way Home"; and the fusion bands, Herbie Hancock, Mahavishnu Orchestra and Chick Corea. I played drums, and this was the music we played. In the 1990s, back in Indianapolis, there became what I would term an introspective period: Nirvana, Stone Temple Pilots and Nine Inch Nails. I had become an equalopportunity listener. The syrupy sagas of lost love had dissipated, yet only to a degree. I go back on occasion.

I have used music in ghost hunting to try to stir a reaction. I have played Dixie at a former Confederate hideaway in Kentucky and big band music in a theater that used to have the real thing. There were favorite songs played for the recently departed. It always seemed to amp things up.

During the long drive home after a paranormal investigation - generally in the wee hours of the morning while tires hummed along a blackened, deserted highway and fellow investigators slept - I would play the post-ghost hunting tunes that had become a tradition: Herbie Hancock's, "Chameleon"; Blue Oyster Cult's, "Screams" (off their first album); and Chris Isaak's, "Wicked Game." It became a form of therapy and music to soothe the soul.

Rick Shaffer, of Greenwood, writes book featuring 500 unique memories from Indy 500 history

By Mark Ambrogi

When Rick Shaffer decided to write a book about the Indianapolis 500, he wanted to include stories that wouldn't normally be mentioned in a recap of the race.

The Greenwood resident's recently released book, "500 on (the INDY) 500: Tales, Facts and Figures on 'The Greatest Race in the World," does just that.

Shaffer, who has been to 40 Indy 500s since his first in 1964, went to his first 11 races as a fan. Since 1981, the 1970 Southport High School graduate has attended the race as a journalist or in a public relations role.

Longtime IndyCar racing writer Robin Miller has known Shaffer for decades.

"It's the kind of book for the die-hard Indy fan that wants more," said Miller, who graduated from Southport in 1967. "It's got stuff in there that even people who know a lot about the race will be surprised to learn. Rick is such a stickler for details. Donald Davidson stepped down (as Indianapolis Motor Speedway historian), and Rick and Dave Scoggan are the two IMS historians in my mind right now if you are going to write a story or book about the Indy 500."

The coffee table book includes color and black and white photos and was published by Costal 181, which specializes in auto racing books.

"I tried to look for photos that have never been published or are rarely published," Shaffer said. "The theme of the book is 'wow, I didn't know that."

Shaffer, who works for Vintage Motorsport, worked on the book on and off for five years.

"I liked the idea that I was going to have little tidbits that weren't widely known," Shaffer said. "My original plan was to have 250 items and then have Robin Miller do the other 250, but Robin was heavily involved with the Indiana Pacers book (in the ABA). So, I just compiled stories with a number and not any chronological list at that time. All of a sudden, I was up to 500 and going strong."

In his first draft, he had 570 stories and thought about changing the title, but then decided he needed to go back to his original plan of 500 tales. Shaffer compared it to when he was covering racing for The Indianapolis Star and would write a notebook with his race coverage.

"The book is like a gigantic notebook on the 500," he said. "I'm getting a lot of good feedback from readers saying it's really easy to read. It doesn't have to be a book where you start at the start and go to the finish; you can hop in anywhere you want."

The book includes how the Indianapolis Motor Speedway started.

"Indianapolis in the first decade of the 20th century was a major player in the auto industry," he said. "The four guys who founded the track were all involved in one phase of the auto industry or the other. They had outgrown using a mile-track at the State Fairgrounds, so they wanted to build a 3-mile to 5-mile circular track."

Shaffer said once they found the property, they brought in an engineer who designed the track to fit the property.

"The rest is history, I guess," he said.

Three-time Indy 500 champion Helio Castroneves wrote the forward to the book. The 262-page book is available at coastal181.com or by calling (877) 907-8181. The cost is $39.95 plus shipping.

IndyCar Series coverage from 2014-19.

Favorite race: "I would have to say 1970 because I was a big Al Unser fan, and that year everything went right for him — he won the pole, led 190 of 200 laps and won his first of four Indy 500s. The first 500 driver's autograph I ever got was Al's, and he was very good with fans, especially kids. He didn't just sign and walk away. He asked me if I was having a good time at the track and how I was doing in school, things like that. That made a lasting impression, and he instantly became my all-time favorite Indy 500 driver. I would also say I was ecstatic to see Helio Castroneves win his three races. In my last year with Bettenhausen Motorsports, I got to represent Helio as his public relations rep. I knew he would be good, so it was gratifying to see him win in Indy and have a great career there. And he could win again at Indy."

As students continue to face challenges due to COVID-19, Scholarship America is again providing help. The Dream Awards is an annual scholarship program for deserving students who have overcome significant barriers to make it to college. This year's diverse Dream Awards recipients include Kathleen Soller from Greenwood and Manuel Alarcon Nava from Indianapolis. Kathleen Soller is a dedicated scholar, an athlete and a cancer survivor in her third year of remission. She was inspired by the compassion and critical care provided by her nurses when she was hospitalized and is currently pursuing her degree in nursing at St. Mary's College. The Dream Award will help her complete her

Manuel Alarcon is committed to public service and eager to learn the history of this country in order to help advance the economic, social and political status of the marginalized. He has overcome many challenges. He came out twice in his life at the age of 11, once as gay, and the other as undocumented. PERSONNEL MATTERS

Don't underestimate your mindset

By Mike Heffner

As I look back, the trials in my life have allowed me to learn or try something new. Most obstacles feel HUGE to us in the moment and often have us feeling worried, fearful or hopeless. In reality, obstacles shape our lives, force us to learn things and bring us new opportunities. Why do we allow the setbacks and detours to make life feel so bleak in the moment? What is your internal response?

- · Have you allowed your mind to wander to areas that are far beyond your control? Do you allow your mind to create a storyline in your head that would sell great in Hollywood? Too many people are generating a full-length motion picture of all the bad things that could happen. Much of this negative, fictional storytelling involves characters and plot twists that aren't even realistic. Do you allow the fiction of social media to sell you a bill of goods? Do you ever look at someone's fame, fortune, success or prestige and wish your life could be more like theirs? Maybe it was their vacation or a newly remodeled kitchen that immediately invokes jealousy and feelings of inadequacy. Almost none of
- Have you found yourself lacking belief, faith or hope? What foundation do you have to stand on if hopelessness and despair are all you have? We are supposed to love, inspire and serve others. Without faith for a greater tomorrow, it's easy to stumble and spiral.

You can overcome these obstacles by replacing fear, fiction and negative self-talk in a way that can empower and provide you and your loved ones with hope, love and gratefulness.

- Replace hopelessness with positive action

 To avoid creating motion pictures in your head, look to change the storyline. Invest in yourself. Spend time each day eating well, exercising and spending time in prayer or meditation. When your body is well physically, spiritually and mentally, you are more powerful, and it's easier to stay focused on the positive.
- •Replace the pressure to succeed with the dedication to the process Do the work. Put in the time, and growth will come. Stay focused on learning and improving instead of the possible failures. Focus on what you can do. If you are focused on helping others in your work, you will find joy and positivity in completing the tasks.

•Replace despair and discontentedness with gratitude - It is almost impossible to be grateful and stressed at the same time. Take time to look for the blessings in your life, work, and the things you get to do every day. As so many things are trying to divide us, look to build a foundation of purpose in your life. Surround yourself with others that have strong beliefs, faith or mindset.

If you have struggled with any of the above, I hope that you can move to a mindset of hope and growth. The key to seeing a future that is full of hope is staying focused on what lies ahead. Look to take advantage of the obstacles by changing what happens next. You can't undo the past, but you can change what happens tomorrow.

Don't shoot me, I am just the piano player

By Howard Hubler

Years ago, this was the memorable line from a western movie. "Don't shoot me, I am just the piano player." Recently a friend said that he saw a similar sign in a restaurant. It said, "If the service is poor, don't blame me, I am just the guy that showed up for work."

One of the reoccurring themes in my columns is the fact that this current $1.9 trillion "free money scheme" is a step too far.

Now that we have pizza parlors open again, as well as restaurants and service businesses in general, the cry is, "I have help wanted ads all over the internet and Facebook. I am paying more than ever in salaries. Now no one comes in to apply for a job. I am in desperate need of young, energetic people to work in my business. Now that I can be open, I am in jeopardy all over again from losing my business as there is no available help-wanted." To most Hoosier business readers, wasn't this also predictable?

For many central Indiana businesses, they have been crying for help ever since Donald Trump's Paycheck Protection Plan put cash in the pockets of the unemployed. If you give an unemployed person a month or two of cash for living expenses, they think they are on the top of the world. The irony is that many businesses are exploding in sales. As a result, they need sales and service help badly. On the upper end, people will spend the money saved during the pandemic from a family vacation skipped and buy wanted or needed consumer items.

What about the younger people at the lower end of the economic spectrum? They are spending like drunken sailors as well. The only thing is that they are still broke. Two months of expenses do nothing in the real world of family expenses. Besides, if they get a job, go to work and make a lot of money, they will spend the rest of their working careers paying back $1.9 trillion of federal debt.

Jockamo Upper Crust Pizza

Jockamo Upper Crust Pizza opened their doors to Greenwood in 2010, three years after opening their first store on the Eastside of Indianapolis. Jockamo is owned by two families, the Duncans and Starks, who used to be neighbors when they lived in Irvington. "The 9th Street salad on our menu is a reference to the street in Irvington where our two families lived," said Mr. Duncan. The pizzeria has three locations and a menu full of salads, pizza, sandwiches, appetizers and more. "Our most popular pizza, at all three locations, is the Slaughterhouse Five, an all-meat pizza with pepperoni, ham, sausage, Italian beef and bacon," said Mr. Duncan. The restaurant makes everything in-house when it comes to their food, with the exclusion of two light dressings.

"We have a quote on our menu that we make everything in-house except the two light dressings we offer, because we don't know how to make anything with less calories than God intended," explained Mr. Duncan. Jockamo Pizza makes their own dough, twelve different sauces, six non-light dressings and soups in-house. They also grind their cheese daily. The owners explained that everything is made to order, and a microwave is never used at any of their locations.

"We've won numerous awards, including from Nuvo, Indy A-List and IndyStar. We're locally owned and proud to be a part of Old Town Greenwood," said Mr. Duncan. Jockamo is open for delivery, take out and dine-in services Sunday-Thursday, 11 a.m. to 9:30 p.m. and Friday and Saturday from 11 a.m. to 10:30 p.m.

"The Mitchells vs. The Machines" A hilarious family romp with a whole lot of heart

MOVIE REVIEW

By Bradley Lane

The film industry nationwide seems to be in a sort of in-between state as films are released both in theaters and on streaming services, sometimes simultaneously. Here in Central Indiana, restrictions are being relaxed thanks to both the widespread availability of the COVID-19 vaccine and Marion County's continued mask mandate. However, for the rest of the country, things might not be as safe. It is a welcome comfort of the pandemic that new films are still releasing exclusively on streaming, like Netflix's excellent "The Mitchells vs. The Machines." Helmed by first-time director Mike Rianda, the film is an energetic blast of passion, creativity and heart.

Rianda positions the film from the perspective of the Mitchell's daughter Katie who is about to leave for film school. This major transition comes at a time where Katie's parents, Rick and Linda, are worried for her security and uninterested in her passion for film. Their disinterest causes Katie a type of disillusionment between family members, which is common when leaving home for the first time. To combat this growing space between the family, Rick decides to cancel Katie's plane ticket to school and take a family road trip to her school in LA. With her entire family on board, including her dinosaur-obsessed little brother, the Mitchells must reconnect, or risk being captured by a robot army that takes control of humanity as they drive to LA.

The most immediately apparent aspect of the film is that the people involved in making it were passionate about what they were putting onto the screen. The animation is lavish and covered with small details that give so much character to the look and feel of the film. This film feels like a genuine and heartfelt ode to family trying and often failing at being the support you need.

"The Mitchells vs. The Machines" could have been a cheesy family moral tale about how parents are underappreciated and have been just as entertaining; the film is dissatisfied with a lack of nuance. It shows how family members of all relations strive to be there for each other and so often fail because of their internal struggles and insular perspectives. It communicates the sacrifices necessary to truly connect with the ones we love, which is a message children and adults desperately need to hear.

Not only is Mike Rianda's directorial debut funny, gorgeously animated and wholly original, but it also leaves audiences with a sincere plea to be more patient, understanding and empathetic with the family members they struggle to connect with. "The Mitchells vs. The Machines" is available to stream on Netflix.

Bradley is a Beech Grove High School alumnus and has been enamored by film for as long as he can remember. He recently graduated from IUPUI, with a degree in Media and Public Affairs with a minor in Film. Bradley can be contacted at blane2214@gmail.com.

Words that only occur nonce upon a time

GRAMMAR GUY

By Curtis Honeycutt

Have you ever heard or uttered a sentence and then thought, "I'll bet no one's ever said that before"? For instance, I was playing with my daughter, Maeve, who is three-and-a-half. She has some stretchy, colorful toys called Monkey Noodles. Maeve has a vivid imagination, but I'll spare the details of the game she invented only to say the game ended with me exclaiming, "We don't put Monkey Noodles in our mouths after we bake them in our tummy ovens!" I doubt those words have ever been put together in the same order in the same sentence before, and I doubt they'll ever need to be uttered again.

I think about these kinds of sentences all the time. Do you know that there's a version of this "once-in-a-lifetime" occasion for standalone words? They're called "nonce" words or "occasionalisms." Nonce words are born when one word gets invented and subsequently utilized one time for one occurrence in one work of writing. These a la carte words are served up once, and then they're done forever.

The word "nonce" means "for the once" or "for one purpose." Yes, back in the day, regular people knew what "nonce" meant. James Murray, editor of the 1884 "New English Dictionary on Historical Principles" (which, in later editions, changed its title to the Oxford English Dictionary), coined the term "nonce-word."

Lewis Carroll's 1871 poem "Jabberwocky" includes several nonsensical words that — up until that point — hadn't been invented, let alone used. The poem introduces us to one-time terms including "brillig," "frabjous," "frumious" and "manxome." While I wasn't there when Carroll penned this work, which would later be included in "Through the Looking-Glass," I doubt he intended these nonce words to exist outside the universe of Alice's Wonderland.

Irish author James Joyce came up with words constantly in his writing. In "Ulysses" alone, Joyce coined the words: "mrkgnao," "poppysmic," "ringroundabout" and "yogibogeybox." While this makes me want to start (and not finish) reading "Ulysses" again, I find it even more interesting that one of Joyce's nonce words became a "real" word: quark.

As everyone already knows, quarks are subatomic particles that science people consider to be the building blocks for all matter. Physicist Murry Gell-Mann, who discovered quarks in the early 1960s, referred to these tiny particles as "quorks" until he came across the word "quark" in Joyce's book "Finnegan's Wake." From then on, "quark" stuck.

So, a word to writers: unless you're ready for them to take on lives of their own, be careful not to throw nonce words around all zoozle-zazzle.

14 And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up:

15 That whosoever believes in Him should not perish but have eternal life.

16 For God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

17 For God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through Him might be saved.

JOHN 3:14-17

For the healing of the nation Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness. They had been bitten by deadly serpents, so God instructed Moses to do this. He did and the nation was healed from the deadly bite of the serpent. Now, Satan is that old serpent, the devil. The nation of this world have been "bitten" by his deadly bite. There is a name for that deadly infection, and it is called sin and the end of sin is death. Jesus is telling Nicodemus that God sent Him to be lifted up so that we also can be given life by looking up to Him as the One lifted up to save all nations, but this will happen one person at a time as that person puts their faith in Christ. This is clearly stated as Jesus used the term "whosoever" and that "whosoever" includes every person ever born no matter their race or national origin. Paul tells us in Romans six that "the wages of sin is death". He follow that up by telling us as well that the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. How anyone can misunderstand God's purpose for sending His Son to be lifted up for the sins of the world I just cannot comprehend. Jesus plainly tells Nicodemus and us by the written Word of God that He is the answer to every covenant that God ever made to man. He is our salvation. Praise the Lord!

God bless and go and have a great day.

Paul A. Kirby is the pastor at the Church of God at 3939 S. Emerson Ave.
