Roncalli kicks off 50th anniversary with summer social

By Nancy Price

Roncalli High School officially kicked off a celebration of the school's 50-year history with a family-friendly summer social last Sunday.

Kids jumped around on bounce houses, cooled off with Slip N Slides and sat for face paintings. Families chowed down on dinner available at various food trucks while listening to a Rebel5ive podcast and live music from MIXTAPE, a local 90s party band.

"We had about 400 people in attendance," said Terese Carson, Vice President for Institutional Advancement at Roncalli High School. "There were some kickball games on the softball diamond. Lots of giveaways. About 200 T-shirts were 'flown into the air' from our T-shirt launcher. The weather was perfect, and the evening culminated in fireworks at 10 p.m. Our guests ranged in age from babies to one guest whom was over 90 years old. It was truly a generational event. Some families had three generations of alumni in attendance.

The evening began with mass in the Roncalli gymnasium, led by Father Douglas Hunter, Roncalli's new chaplain coordinator. Fr. Hunter, a graduate of Cardinal Ritter High School, has also served as pastor at St. Roch Catholic Church for the past year. In addition, he is the chaplain for the Indianapolis Colts.

The school's next event will be a 50 Year Celebration Dinner on Sept. 19. "We are also releasing a weekly podcast (which started in April) to highlight those whom have made such a significant impact on our school community," Carson said. "Our students have a special uniform shirt to signify our 50 years. Everything we do this year will focus on our 50th birthday! Our new gymnasium is set to open in October. There is much to celebrate this year!"

Greenwood Cemetery – Conclusion

HAUNTS & JAUNTS

By Rick Hinton

Today you can discern the original section of the Greenwood Cemetery from the newer addition to the north by the yellow bridge separating the two. It's a startling contrast between the beginnings of a small-town cemetery and time that has moved forward. The newer section has a modern feel and can be seen from adjoining U.S. 31 as traffic rolls by. The ground is more uniform due to the advancement of burial science; the older section lies locked in the past.

Early graveyards were often located in the center of communities, becoming a social gathering spot. They used cemeteries and churchyards as meet & greets for markets, fairs, games and picnics. Not so very long ago on a sunny, hot Sunday afternoon, before the advent of air-conditioning, Crown Hill Cemetery in Indianapolis was the place to go for a few hours of frolic, picnicking and to cool off! It would appear people back then were more active and embraced the outdoors.

I don't personally have an overwhelming passion for investigating cemeteries but will admit I do on occasion embrace the peace and solitude they offer, along with the opportunity to study the life histories reflected in the stones. It has a calming effect on the soul to realize that even in the act of "passing," life continues its steady course forward unabated.

Many feel there's a bad side to investigating cemeteries. Many cemeteries, Indiana included, have rumors of a "Big Nasty" – a dark ominous force that will bum-rush you and watch joyfully as you sprint for your car. Some chowder-heads stroll into a graveyard armed with Ouija Boards and aspirations of a stirring seance – an evening that can come around full circle and bite them in the rear.

One proclaimed – "I confess that I've never hunted ghosts in a cemetery, because frankly I think a cemetery ghost might be boring. Would you come back to haunt your moldering body? Not me! I'm going to come back to some place I loved when I am a ghost. I'm going to jump out of walls and scare the willies out of people! But, that's just me."

Another had deeper insight – "If our consciousness can transcend the dimensions, then what we are observing could be nothing more than the shadows of a 4th dimensional existence."

Should you hunt in a cemetery? There's nothing inherently bad about doing it, but at the same token, nothing good either.

Yet, it should always be approached in a respectful manner, and to respect the living. Folks paying a visit to their deceased will not necessarily be enamored by your scientific foray in contacting the dead. They'll most likely find it highly disrespectful and offensive. This is, after all, the resting place of their loved one, and might like to hold onto the belief that the departed have moved on to a better place – not lingering behind as a ghost. If you're in a cemetery when they come to call it's best to keep quiet, put away the equipment and either move on or wait for them to leave. It's not your playground, but rather a tribute to honor those who have lived and loved before us.

Visiting the Greenwood Cemetery is akin to touching base with the history of a community; those that have come before made their own personal mark and moved on. What do I feel while visiting these grounds? Peace ... serenity ... a sense of awe and wonder in this journey through life!

Six Southside residents form the Beech Grove Artist Collective

By Stephanie Dolan

First Fridays in Indianapolis are synonymous with gallery shows, concert venues and food truck festivals. Artists of every genre come together on these nights to show their work, discuss their art and encourage new and budding artists to take the leap and put their work out for public consumption.

Since March, the Beech Grove Artist Collective has been holding First Friday shows along Main Street, gaining momentum and popularity while at the same time inspiring new artists to join in and be a part of the magic.

"It started as a simple conversation on Facebook," Claire Dillehay said. "I knew a couple of places that would be willing to host artists, and now it's grown into 20 artists and over 10 businesses. The community has been really receptive."

Dillehay is an art teacher at Jeremiah Gray Elementary School in Perry Township, teaching first through fifth grade.

Local talent flourishes

"Whoever is a fan of First Fridays in Irvington or Fountain Square should definitely come check us out," she said. "We have kind of the same vibe and some really great artists selling and displaying their art. We have a lot of talent in Beech Grove that we want to showcase."

"It's totally something new in the community that's been missing for a very long time," Cherie Joy said.

Joy does custom painting work but specializes in murals. She is a graduate of the Herron School of Art and works full time at her craft.

"I've seen more people than ever walking on Main Street," James Martin said. "The locals are really enjoying it. First Fridays are awesome."

Martin, who is also a mural artist, said that art is the language of culture.

"When you infuse that into a community, then everyone in the community sees that culture; it's like a magnet that draws everybody out," he said.

Beech Grove's first art festival

Another chance for the collective to draw everyone out will come on Aug. 10 with the first Beech Grove Art Festival at Sarah T. Bolton Park. The festival will include a Masterpiece in a Day contest in which participants will have five hours to complete a work of art. Cash prizes will be awarded to first, second and third place in the amounts of $200, $100 and $50 respectively.

"We'll each have a booth, and there should also be at least 10 other artists there as well," Dillehay said. "There's going to be face painting and balloon animals, so some things for kids. And the Lions Club is going to provide food."

Dillehay said she wants to bring the arts to as many people as possible.

"We want to make it all very accessible," she said. "We want to make things free and easy for the public to attend."

"There is no booth rent and no admission," Kelsey Behl said. "We want everyone to come out."

Behl is no stranger to First Fridays, as – before Beech Grove began their events in March – she was showing her abstract paintings at Fountain Square First Fridays.

"I live and work here in Beech Grove, and when I saw an ad about First Fridays I was like 'finally!'," she said.

Martin, for one, hopes that the Masterpiece in a Day contest will draw out some artists who haven't yet had the confidence to show their work in public.

"There may be people who believe they're an artist, but they're just not good enough," he said. "Something like this can really pull them out. As artists, we're our own worst critics, and so we may not value our work like we should. Often, we find out by meeting the public the value of these things. My job as an artist is to create and let the art be what it is. I learn all kinds of life lessons. I've got my value from it. Then you have to get it out and let it go."

"Art offers so many beneficial things, and when I can share that I feel like I'm making a difference," Dillehay said.

And those differences can occur for the artists just as much as the art lovers.

"I've just been drawing my whole life," Matt Beeson said. "I have anxiety. It's like journaling. I never really know what I'm doing when I start anything. I like to use poster board and sharpies, so it's smooth and therapeutic for me at the same time. It really helps."

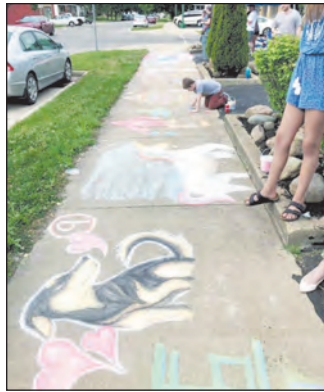

Beeson is a stagehand for the local union. "The collective is growing a lot faster than we'd anticipated," he said. "Everything is really taking off."

Helping to heal a mental health crisis

"We are experiencing a mental health crisis with children, and I feel like that's my mission now as an art teacher where I can provide experiences where they can regulate their emotions and work through things," Dillehay said. "Art education is kind of shifting into that way of teaching."

Martin agrees that art can change lives, one masterpiece at a time.

"A lot of schools are interested in having artists come in and talk about what art actually is," he said. "I'm thinking it's becoming a trend for more schools to try to infuse art."

Martin too has battled anxiety and depression, and he's seen firsthand how art can affect his emotions.

"I feel like art really is the cure for anxiety and depression," he said. "I've had severe anxiety and depression for a long time, and what I've found is that when I create, it silences the depression voice. When you create something, it takes away the validity of the words that depression creates. Before long, you can't hear the negative voices. I think it helps a lot of people to create something."

And creating something is just what the collective has in mind.

The public can enjoy First Friday along Main Street in Beech Grove Aug. 2. For more information on the Beech Grove Artist Collective, find them on Facebook or Instagram. For information on booth space and contest info for the Beech Grove Art Festival, email beechgroveartistcollective@gmail.com.

"When you integrate arts into a community it helps the community thrive and grow," Dillehay said. "Not only does it help artists, it helps businesses and it helps the people that live in the community."

PERSONNEL MATTERS

Why applicants say 'no' to your job offer

By Howard Hubler

Many employers are experiencing something that they have never experienced before – applicants are turning down their job offers. Thanks to a tight labor market and record low unemployment rate, employers in the area are facing threats to their business that they are not accustomed to facing. What used to be important to applicants has changed and it differs with each generation. But no matter the generation, employers must adjust in this market. They must move quicker, be more flexible and make the process easier for applicants.

In a recent survey by Express Employment Professionals, 40 percent of respondents said applicants choose not to accept an offer because the company was “not the perfect fit.” Twenty-eight percent said low pay was a factor, while 16 percent said both “lack of transportation” and “lack of advancement” were key factors.

What should employers focus on to get applicants to say “yes?”

1.) FOCUS ON YOUR REPUTATION OF BEING A GREAT EMPLOYER IN THE COMMUNITY – if you are a great place to work, current employees and others in the community will talk about it.

2.) ALLOW APPLICANTS AN OPTION TO SHADOW OR TOUR – allow for the applicant to see the job “live.” This helps them see the real job and talk with current employees absent of the manager to know the “what’s it like to work here?”

3.) SHOW A PATH FOR LEARNING AND ADVANCEMENT – have examples of others who have gained new skills, promotions or gained additional responsibilities.

4.) HAVE COMPETITIVE PAY RATES AND BENEFITS PACKAGES AS THE CURRENT MARKETPLACE – you can’t expect to attract talent with the lowest pay rates and poor benefits. You don’t have to be the highest if the culture is strong and other items in this list are present.

5.) OFFER SOME FLEXIBILITY WITH THEIR SCHEDULE – you don’t have to offer the ability to work from home but some flexibility to attend school or family-related events can be a huge help to a parent. If possible, allow an employee to flex the schedule on occasion.

6.) MOVE TO MAKE AN OFFER QUICKLY – if the applicant has made the decision they are in a search, they are likely in the pipeline of other employers.

The economy is strong, and the tight labor market isn’t going to go away anytime soon even if things soften. It’s a jobseeker’s market and applicants currently feel like they are more valuable, and they know they have options. The employers that are winning the war for talent are hitting the six key areas above but even then, they are seeing turnover.

Greenwood dermatologist celebrates a 50-year career on the Southside

FEATURE

By Nancy Price

Ask Dr. Thomas Cortese anything you'd ever want to know about dermatology. He'll tell you. He'll also tell you he's wanted to be a doctor since he was 8 years old, and that his career has spanned 50 years.

Just don't ask his age. He won't tell you that.

"A lot of patients who come here ask, 'How old are you?' I say I don't have an age," Cortese said with a smile. "Our professors in residency said, 'You'll be asked how old you are (by your patients). You have to have some way to make it look like you're making up an age; tell your patient age is what you make it for you.'"

Cortese is a dermatologist with Forefront Dermatology, which has offices nationwide, in Greenwood. Born and raised on the Southside of Indianapolis, he attended St. Roch and graduated from Cathedral High School. He studied premed and chemistry at I.U. in Bloomington before attending the I.U. School of Medicine in Indianapolis.

During his junior year of medical school, Cortese attended a lecture at Riley Hospital and was intrigued with a doctor's presentation of photos of skin rashes. "Seeing the problem appealed to me. I saw diseases involved in the skin and wanted to be a doctor that took care of that," he said.

Cortese had spent just a week at his residency at a hospital now known as Eskenazi Health when he received a draft notice to attend basic training at Fort Sam Houston, Texas during the Vietnam War. Shortly after, a telegram was sent stating that his orders were to go to California instead. He was stationed at Presidio of San Francisco for basic training and assigned to work in dermatology at Letterman Army Hospital.

"I stayed there for two years," he said. "I liked the Army and was willing to stay, but there were no openings in dermatology."

Now semi-retired, Cortese has been with Forefront Dermatology for 50 years.

"I enjoy my job because I can teach patients about their skin as well as teach medical students," he said. "I can talk to the patients in a language they understand. My father gave me the best advice. He said, 'Treat them like they would want to be treated. That's my motto.'"

"We are so honored to have Dr. Cortese as a part of the Forefront family," said Dr. Betsy Wernli, a dermatologist with Forefront Dermatology in Manitowoc, WI. "At Forefront we choose carefully who we partner with because quality patient care matters. Dr. Cortese demonstrates the ethical medicine and exceptional patient care every single day."

Cortese has no plans to retire permanently. "I'm doing this because I find that helping patients means more to me than hitting a golf ball and chasing a golf ball and seeing how many times, I can get the ball into a cup," he said. "I want to stay working as long as I'm physically able."

Beautify Beech Grove Farmers Market partners with WIC next week

FEATURE

By Nancy Price

Volunteers and several vendors with Beautify Beech Grove Farmers Market will be providing qualifying low-income families with fresh produce next Tuesday afternoon.

"Beautify Beech Grove Farmers Market is proud to be a participating farmers market that accepts WIC vouchers," said Julie Lockwood, a volunteer with the farmers market. "WIC representatives will be distributing vouchers at our market on Aug. 6 from 3-6 p.m. for women who qualify. Vouchers can be used as cash for the purchase of fresh fruit and vegetables. We have several vendors who accept WIC vouchers."

The Special Supplemental Nutrition Program for Women, Infants, and Children (WIC) provides federal grants to states for supplemental foods, health care referrals and nutrition education for low-income pregnant, breastfeeding and non-breastfeeding postpartum women, and to infants and children up to age 5 who are found to be at nutritional risk.

The basic eligibility requirement is a family income below 185 percent of the federal poverty level. Most states allow automatic income eligibility, where a person or family participating in certain benefits programs, such as the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program, Medicaid or Temporary Assistance for Needy Families, may automatically meet the income eligibility requirements. Currently, WIC serves 53 percent of all infants born in the United States.

"WIC comes to the market to distribute vouchers two times a year," Lockwood said. "This year when they previously came to the market, there were approximately 100 women that received the vouchers."

"We expect a very large crowd," added Jim Eckstein, a volunteer with the farmers market. "Each family that signs up will get three $8 vouchers for fresh locally grown produce."

Beech Grove Farmers Market is in the parking lot of South Emerson Church of God, 3939 S. Emerson Ave., and is open every Tuesday from 3-6 p.m. through October.

Keeping the memory of Edgewood alive

FEATURE

By Rick Hinton

The Edgewood Elementary School, 1408 Epler Ave., had its beginnings in the fall of 1914, opening as a four-room schoolhouse to accommodate Grades 1 through 8. Over the years that changed as the small neighborhood grew. By 1939 the school also grew, adding eight more classrooms and a cafeteria as part of a WPA project. Even that was not enough, and an overflow was desperately needed. In 1949 the James Whitcomb Riley School was built just a stone's throw away during a re-structure of the school system: it was used for Grades 1 and 2, with its larger parent Edgewood Elementary, by 1953, limited to Grades 3 through 6. Life rolled on as it does with new schools built in the area and the tall gothic building became utilized as a meeting place for local organizations and community affairs. The building closed for good in the spring of 1980, razed later that same year.

There is a passion about the Edgewood School and neighborhood community for those who grew up on the adjoining streets and spent their childhood within the classrooms of the then rural school. There is also a truckload of memories of a time when things were simpler and the pace of life considerably slower. Many of those memories of the Edgewood School involved an Indiana passion – basketball!

On July 23, the Perry Township/Southport Historical Society hosted an inaugural event, paying tribute to childhood hoops and a school that played an important role in their lives – The Edgewood Epler Kautsky Basketball Hall of Fame.

Inductees in the Hall of Fame are divided into three distinct groups:

- Those who attended Edgewood Elementary. (Louie Dampier and Pat Williams are inaugural inductees)
- Members of the neighborhood grocery owner Frank Kautsky's semi-pro basketball team in the 1930s. This was Indiana's first pro team and a precursor to the establishment of the present-day NBA. (Inductees Frank Kautsky, Paul "Pete" Bailey and Oral Hildenbrand)
- All the great basketball legends who played the 10 outside goals at the school. You did not have to be from the Southside. In the 50s, 60s and 70s these goals were considered the "Mecca" of basketball during the spring and summer months. (Current inductees are George McGinnis and Steve Downing)

Six to eight names will be added to the roster every year. Rumor has it that John Wooden from the Kautsky era, and former head coach of UCLA, may just be one of them.

Southside mover and shaker, Ted Lobdell (featured in a series of articles for The Southside Times in 2018) and Barry Hix did the legwork by speaking with contractors, the designing of a plaque and forming a group to decide who the first inductees would be. The Hall of Fame was the brainchild of local writer Fred Shonk, who took over the evening's emcee duties. Trophies were presented to inductees in attendance or family members if they were not. There were smiles and applause as the recipients accepted their reward and thanked the crowd. Pat Williams was passionate about how the school, basketball and those he developed friendships with had shaped his young life. He could have spoken all night! That's what memories will do to you.

"I can say without a doubt that I was truly fortunate enough to grow up 'Edgewood' style," Lobdell proclaimed. "When I see, hear, feel and speak of the memories to others, the emotional feelings are priceless!"

Hix also attended Edgewood Elementary, graduating from Southport High School (the old building, now the Perry Education building). Basketball certainly factored into his early years. "The number of guys that played in the gym and out on the courts from 1920 until 1980 has to be a staggering figure," he declared. "Probably in the neighborhood of thousands!"

And ... there are the little things that turn into big memories. Danny Stamm, an Edgewood alumnus who lives within a couple of blocks of where the school once stood, remembers the "Mickey Manhole." "It was a manhole cover outside of the main court ... about 35 feet from the net," he recalled. "Not too many people could hit that shot ... I couldn't. Those that did yelled out MICK-EY MANTLE! I don't remember where that came from or from who." Stamm, along with Lobdell and Hix, have initiated the erection of a memorial goal erected upon the site of the former school. Hopefully it will be completed in a couple of months.

"All those playing basketball for so many years in that two-block area ... it was one special time," Hix reflected.

Maybe, just maybe, on one of those summer evenings you might be treated to the stir of echoes of boisterous laughter and taunting, the dribble of a ball against the pavement and the swoosh of a net as the ghosts of our childhood never really go away.

Grant to help fight opioid crisis awarded to select Indiana cities, including Beech Grove

FEATURE

By Angela Morefield

A $35,000 grant from Rx Abuse Leadership Initiative (RALI) will aid Indiana cities and towns, including Beech Grove, in the fight against the opioid epidemic.

The grant was announced during a press conference held July 22 at Beech Grove City Hall. The additional funding brings RALI's contribution toward Indiana initiatives to a total of $85,000.

The additional grant awarded to Aim, or Accelerate Indiana Municipalities, follows the overwhelming response to the Aim Drug and Opioid Abuse Grant program, a program Aim created with the initial $50,000 from RALI to provide targeted community grants to individual municipalities. Aim will distribute $85,000 and 20,000 safe drug disposal bags across 23 city and town governments in Indiana, including the city of Beech Grove.

Launched in July 2018, RALI is a diverse coalition of business and community leaders, patient organizations and other health-care stakeholders dedicated to finding and supporting solutions to end the opioid crisis. RALI Indiana has partnered with Aim to address misuse across Indiana, committing to ensure all corners of the state have access to education and necessary resources.

Beech Grove Mayor Dennis Buckley said, "Attacking this crisis begins at the local level. We are thankful for these new resources because we believe the funds will actually help save lives by allowing us to teach more of our neighbors about the signs of addiction and where they can find help."

Beech Grove medics, firefighters and police officers responded to more than 160 reports of drug misuse last year. More than 100 of those cases required the use of Narcan. With the help of Beech Grove Comprehensive Drug Free Coalition (CDFC) steps are being accomplished through education and response to the crisis. CDFC and the city of Beech Grove were chosen for the new funding to enhance the efforts of response to the opioid epidemic. State Representative Cindy Kirchofer said, "It will truly take all of us together to bring this crisis under control."

CDFC is a group of partners in health care, law enforcement, education and local government with the mission of teaching the community about the signs of substance abuse. Few people realize these signs can start as early as grade school. "Our goal is to also to reduce the stigma of addiction. Helping people understand that addiction is a disease just like any other," Diana Hendricks, Executive Director of the board for the CDFC said. "This grant from Aim and RALI will allow us to distribute key materials to hundreds of homes here in Beech Grove. Materials that include contact information for our coalition and for national crisis and substance abuse prevention hotlines. That way everyone knows there is always help available."

RALI is partnering with Code 3 to bring the RALI CARES educational trailer to several communities, including Beech Grove. The RALI CARES exhibit is a hands-on tour of a teenage bedroom to help parents and caregivers learn about possible warning signs of substance misuse and abuse. Experts, including local law enforcement, will help guide adults through the trailer to educate them on warning signs and potential areas of concern and answer any questions participants may have.

How to help local children in need of school supplies

An estimated 15 million children live in extreme poverty in the U.S. and arrive on their first day of school without supplies they need in the classroom.

The Salvation Army is teaming up with local Walmarts to help children needing school supplies with a campaign called "Stuff the Bus." This Saturday, Aug. 3, participating Southside Walmarts, including those located at 882 S. State Road 135 in Greenwood, 4650 S. Emerson Ave. in Beech Grove and 7245 U.S. 31 S. in Perry Township will have a list of suggested supplies for shoppers on-line or in the store.

Supplies will help fill The Salvation Army's bus or collection bin during the event. The goal is to provide new school supplies for classrooms and Hoosier children in need across the state. Shoppers can follow the national campaign on social media using the hashtag #StuffTheBus.

Providing school supplies to students in need helps give them a boost of self-confidence and sets them up for a positive and successful school year. All donations made will remain in the local community and will help The Salvation Army provide back-to-school support to local children in need and supplies to restock classrooms as the school year progresses.

The event will be held during the hours of 8:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m.

The Farewell

A clash of cultures, distilled into a funny and poignant family drama

MOVIE REVIEW

By Bradley Lane

While it may not be readily apparent when surveying the most popular movies currently, filmmaking is experiencing a great change regarding what stories are getting told. While big studios fall over themselves to remake and serialize every existing property put to celluloid, independent production studios like A24 and even arthouse subsidiaries of large studios are creating opportunities for voices previously unrepresented in traditional filmmaking. For decades the director's chair had been overwhelmingly male, and overwhelmingly white. Which is not inherently a bad thing, but it does limit the types of perspectives from which we can tell compelling stories. Enter: Lulu Wang, a Chinese-American writer and director that crafts a personal and touching story that is unequivocally unique to her experience as an artist, a person of Chinese heritage and as an American.

Billi is struggling as a writer living in New York City when she learns of her family's decision to withhold information from Billi's grandmother, or Nai Nai. The Farewell is centered around this lie. It is a simple lie that comes with a lot of implications, but ultimately is designed to protect Billi's Nai Nai. Her family decides to hide the fact that she is dying from Nai Nai, thus in order to aid in her passing by bearing the burden of her ailing health for her as a family. In order to get together to see her without Nai Nai suspecting anything, the family stages a fake wedding for Billi's cousin in China to see Nai Nai one last time together as a family. The Farewell is based on Lulu Wang's own experience with such a lie.

It would be an absolute disservice if I did not credit both Awkwafina and Shuzhen Zhao's performances as the absolute standouts of The Farewell. Awkwafina takes a step out of her comedic comfort zone in portraying Billi's palpable vulnerability. She is required to bear the stresses of conflicting cultural values while masking all these intense emotions when she is with her Nai. Shuzhen Zhao has been acting in China since she was 16 years old and makes her American debut as Nai Nai at the age of 75 years old. Zhao steals the screen whenever she has time to shine. She and Awkwafina also have a wonderful chemistry together, which makes every scene they share a treat to watch.

There is a beautiful symmetry to The Farewell in how it portrays both American and Chinese culture. Wang is critical of both American and Chinese culture throughout the film, but through her unique experience of reckoning with this situation in real life, comes to understand a more universal type of truth than what she previously sought. It sits outside of the confines of culture and makes viewing The Farewell an extremely humanistic experience.

The Farewell delivers a unique perspective carefully crafted into a universally understandable experience.

Get set for a long, volcanic winter

NUTRITION

By Curtis Honeycutt

You may want to sit down for this.

There's a supervolcano under Yellowstone National Park called the Yellowstone Caldera that last erupted in a big way approximately 640,000 years ago. The next time it erupts, it could potentially result in a large swath of North America getting covered in ash, creating a sustained volcanic winter that kills roughly half the world's population. Now, before we get ahead of ourselves, scientists at the Yellowstone Volcano Observatory warn against overreacting to reports that this supervolcano is overdue for another full-scale eruption. In fact, they reassure us that "recurrence intervals of these events are neither regular nor predictable."

Oh, good. The dormant supervolcano is unpredictable. Let's not anger it.

OK, let's set aside the looming volcano apocalypse to talk about the words "sit" and "set." These two are easily confused and often get mistakenly interchanged.

Set means to "put something in a specific place." Set is (almost always) a transitive verb. Transitive verbs are always action verbs and they always require direct objects. Direct objects act on another noun. Take the following sentence: We should set aside our differences; the big volcano could erupt at any time. "We" is the subject. "Set" is the transitive verb. "Differences" is the direct object.

Sit means "to be seated." Sit is an intransitive verb. Intransitive verbs are always action verbs and they do not require direct objects. Consider this example: You shouldn't sit there; the supervolcano is directly beneath your feet! In the first complete thought before the semicolon, "you" is the subject and "sit" is the intransitive verb. The sentence has no direct object.

Set requires another thing – you can set secret Oreos on top of the cabinet, so your kids don't know about them. You can set your keys on the table. When you sit, you sit yourself and nothing else. I sit. She sits. Banjo the trained sloth sits on the top of the giant cheese sculpture. The supervolcano sits and waits to wreak havoc on planet Earth. You get the idea.

Whether or not the Yellowstone Caldera decides to usher the end of humanity, it's a good idea to understand the difference between "sit" and "set." Although I doubt the world depends on it, it's possible our future lava overlords will give us a pop quiz on the difference between the two. Depending on which version of the multiverse we inhabit presently, having a solid handle on "sit" and "set" could save us from total destruction.

Weekly Devotion

4 Then the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

5 Before I formed you in the belly I knew you; and before you came forth out of the womb I sanctified you, and I ordained you a prophet unto the nations.

6 Then said I, Ah, Lord God! behold, I cannot speak: for I am a child.

7 But the Lord said unto me, Say not, I am a child: for you shall go to all that I shall send you, and whatsoever I command you, you shall speak.

8 Be not afraid of their faces: for I am with you to deliver you, said the Lord.

JEREMIAH 1:4-8

We have been in camp meetings for the past week. We have heard great messages and had great fellowship. There is nothing else quite like it and I have a tendency to feel sorry for those who never understood God's purpose for these camps. Next week we will be with other folks down in southern Indiana for another camp meeting and another Evangelist and the fellowship of the saints of God. It is in these camp meetings that the "word" of the Lord goes out and forth into the ears and minds and, hopefully, hearts of those attending. God's word is powerful and those that think otherwise will discover otherwise.

God knew us and knows us, and God has plans for us. This is the inference of this passage of scripture. God is saying to Jeremiah that He knew His purpose for him before he was even conceived. That sounds pretty far-fetched, but if God says it, it is the truth. This catches Jeremiah by surprise. By the witness of his own words he tells us that he is not a conversationalist and not a preacher or teacher and, in those areas, he is nothing but a child. But God cautions him not to contradict Him. Jeremiah will go and do what God commanded. He will speak what God tells him to and his faith in God will grow as He does. So does our will grow as we become more and more obedient to God.

God bless and go and have a great day.

Paul A. Kirby is the pastor at the Church of God at 3939 S. Emerson Ave.
