When I'm away, the house will play

HAUNTS & JAUNTS

By Rick Hinton

It happens every time I go away. You can just about set your watch to it. Our house (and the residing spirit) plays havoc upon my wife. We believe it is female. Maybe she doesn't like change? Maybe she has a crush upon me? Or quite possibly, my presence (a calming influence?) is a factor in keeping her toned down? I don't know. I do know that, on this paranormal journey, the more we think we know actually turns into the less we understand. I left Friday afternoon for a Scout outing. I received a text from Laura on Saturday informing me "the spook was off the scale last night!" She was frazzled. This spirit seems to enjoy messing with her.

Friday evening a bulb in the front window lamp started flickering. It had never done that before, but it's an old antique lamp, so who knows. Could have been a socket or the bulb itself. Not necessarily anything to get excited about, and certainly nothing to definitively claim paranormal. However, that was only the beginning...

After awakening from a soothing couch nap at midnight (with TV playing), Laura made her way upstairs to go to bed. That's when the real fun began. She left the bedroom door ajar, something we seldom do. Soon the floorboards in the adjoining hallway began creaking. Footsteps? Sure sounded like them. Norm the dog was in the bedroom with her, and Jerry the cat is small, skinny and much too light to make sounds like that. He treads lightly. Then a light show began playing on the wall she faced. They were like car headlights, but from the positioning of the front windows, impossible to reach our bedroom. Meanwhile my side of the bed began making noises... like subtle movement. It's a Sleep Number bed... there are two separate mattresses, yet it was only my side of the bed making the noise. Laura refused to turn and glance towards my side. It felt safer that way. She keep her gaze upon the opposite wall and the lights until she fell asleep.

The next morning Norm lay in the lower den (as he most often does) and suddenly started barking. It was his warning bark. We know this bark. Laura investigated. His attention was riveted to the small bathroom across from the room. He does this a lot, even when I am here. Have I told you our house is haunted?

Monday I leave to Chicago for work, returning Wednesday night. I can't wait to hear of my wife's adventures upon my return!

JOURNEY TO THE FINAL GOAL

Greenwood's two-time champion Michael Archer joins Team USA at the third Powerchair Football World Cup

By Nicole Davis

Greenwood resident Michael Archer is the only member of Team USA preparing to play for the third time in the World Cup Power Soccer championship games. He is also planning for it to be his last.

"One of the things we were taught, it is about the final goal, but savor all the memories on the journey to the final goal," he said. "I'm looking forward to the final journey."

A graduate of Greenwood Community High School and Purdue University, Archer always enjoyed sports. He was born with arthrogryposis, a stiffness on his joints which restricts his movement. He used to play Challenger Baseball, designed for youth with special needs.

While attending his sister's T-ball practice, a parent asked Archer if he'd ever heard of power soccer, the first and only competitive team sport developed for power wheelchair users. He said no, and agreed to go watch a practice.

"From there, I just fell in love," he said. "In Challenger Baseball, it wasn't that big of a challenge for me and I like challenges. I had to have someone help me because I can't run down the bases or stand for a long time. This sport, nobody has to help me. The thing I love about it is how independent it makes disabled people. While we're on the court, we make decisions and gain the confidence of being independent on the court. Off the court, it carries over into our daily lives."

Power soccer is usually in a gymnasium on a basketball court. Two teams of four players attack, defend, pass and spinkick a 13-inch soccer ball. The chairs are regulated and cannot go faster than 6.5 mph. Archer said his chair can kick the ball an estimated 40 mph.

Archer joined the local team, Circle City Rollers, in 2004. Four Championship Cup competitions are held annually in the U.S., sponsored by MK Battery. Since Archer's time playing, Circle City Rollers has won six championships.

In 2006, he was selected to become a member of Team USA. Players for Team USA are selected from the more than 60 club teams in the nation. He trained for a year and a half before traveling to Tokyo, Japan for the first Powerchair Football World Cup.

"We were the underdog," Archer said. "France was our biggest rival. We beat France in the finals, in sudden death penalty kicks, to win the World Cup."

Archer said being selected to represent his country in a sport he could play was a great honor.

"One of my favorite moments is the very first goal I scored," he said. "It was in about 20 seconds. There was a foul. It was close to their goal. My teammate kicked the ball to me. I did a big, 180-degree kick and it went in the goal. Seeing the fans stand up, cheer 'USA, USA,' it gives me chills now."

He was selected again for Team USA, this time as team captain, for the World Cup in Paris, France in 2011. Again, Team USA came out victorious.

Three years ago, he was selected for his third time on Team USA to be held this July 5 to 9 in Kissimmee, Fla. Those interested can watch World Cup games live at livestream.com/powersoccershop/2017F IPFAWorldCup.

"It was one of my goals to have the world cup here and to win here," Archer said. "That's what I look forward to most - winning on our home soil and representing the fans where they can come and watch."

Team USA consists of 12 players from across the country; five are from Indiana. Eight players will travel to the World Cup. The team holds its training camps in different states throughout the years, and the next one is in Greenwood from April 27 to 29.

"Training camp is a very long day," Archer said. "We're in the gym at 9 a.m. and sometimes don't leave until 9 at night. It's very intense. Everyone is tired. All the chair batteries start dying at the end."

The team will play exhibition games open to the public at Mount Pleasant Christian Church's Community Life Center, 407 N. Bluff Rd., Greenwood on April 29, 1-5 p.m.

"I would encourage people to come out to raise awareness in what this sport is about," Archer said. "We take a lot of pride. You don't just get in your chair and kick a ball around. This takes a lot of time, dedication and a lot of skill for the athlete to control the chair, make quick decisions on their own to maneuver the ball around and score."

Rock the Block Run supports local nonprofits through block party, 10k and 5k run

By Beth Wade

Fifteen hundred Center Grove and surrounding area residents gathered at Center Grove High School for the second Rock the Block Run on April 22.

The Block Party opened with booths on "Main Street" supporting local organizations and offering free spins on the prize wheel. The cold April morning did not deter residents from coming out and supporting their local organizations.

"That was a cold 45 degrees," said resident Barney Woods. "I still had a great time, and got my best time this season!"

Those who attended enjoyed live entertainment from Trent Line, Alex Milligan, Isaac Taylor and Rachel Taylor, and the a Capella group, Sh'Boom; all students at Center Grove High School. It was announced at the conclusion of the event that the 2018 Rock the Block Run will take place on April 21, 2018. Proceeds will be divided between the 26 local nonprofits. More than $25,000 was donated this year.

"Despite the frigid temperatures, it went off without a hitch," said organizer, Erin Smith. "Everyone seemed to have a good time and we're ready to go for next year."

Packing for the hungry Mount Pleasant Christian Church changes the world through meal-packing event

By Beth Wade

On Saturday, April 23 Mount Pleasant Christian Church (MPCC) partnered with local organization Pack Away Hunger to assemble meals for the hungry in Cuba. The packing event was a part of Mount Pleasant's 2017 Go Change the World events. "This is something that is fun to do," says MPCC member Mary. "It's easy, anyone could do it."

Pack Away Hunger's mission is to "Greatly improve the lives of children and others who suffer from hunger and malnutrition in the United States and developing nations." Mount Pleasant Christian Church worked together with Pack Away Hunger to meet this mission by packing 400,000 meals for the hungry in Cuba. The community worked in three shifts throughout the morning and afternoon to meet their 400,000 goal.

Many stations worked to package food for Cuba.
 Destiny and Sophia Woolslayer seal and line up packages to be boxed.
 Volunteers Mary, Cindy, Jenn, Gloria Ruth, Maddie, Elizabeth, and Mark work together to fill packets.
 Halle Lane and Emma Foley fill empty packages with rice.
 Carolyn Prosser and Saju Joseph chat while they work.

Making it happen

Baxter YMCA dedicated plaque to late members, Annabel and Grover Hartman

FEATURE

By Nicole Davis

"It's not fair to enjoy what you have as far as activities provided here unless you make it happen, contribute in some way," Annabel Hartman told The Southside Times just after her 100th birthday in 2015.

Contribute, she did. Annabel and her late husband, Grover, were charter members of the Baxter YMCA, along with many other community involvements. Annabel passed away Dec. 30 at 101 years old. To honor her memory, staff at the Baxter Y took a plaque once dedicated to Grover and created a new one to honor both him and Annabel.

"They invested their lives in that which will outlive them," the plaque states on the bottom.

"She would have been honored by the dedication," said the Hartmans' son, Elden. "We had a long commitment to this Y, through my parents. They have been instrumental in creating this building, founding this Y, keeping it going when times were rough in the 60s. It's gratifying to see the beautiful facilities and an honor to have the gymnasium dedicated to my mom and my dad. It's appreciated by the family."

Annabel first joined the YMCA at 13 years old. She and Grover joined the Southside's YMCA when their children were young, back when members met in two dairy barns on Hanna Avenue. The couple had four children, Lowell, Worth and twins Elden and Howard.

Later, the couple were involved in helping fundraise for the current Baxter Y building on Shelby Street.

Annabel was also active in the United Methodist Church. She was for a 50-year member of Center United Methodist Church and for her last six years was at North United Methodist Church. Annabel's has a career public education. In 1968 she began substitute teaching in Indianapolis Public Schools, did student teaching at School #22, and began her career in adult education. For 15 years she taught Adult Basic Education at the Indianapolis Day Adult High School first located at Wood, then Tech and finally Attucks High Schools. Annabel received her Masters in Adult Education from Ball State University at age 62.

Grover passed away in 1988. Annabel stayed active in the community, continuing to attend the Baxter YMCA. Later, she began to teach water aerobics at Robin Run. All the while, she found ways to continue giving back to the Baxter Y. For her 100th birthday, Nov. 30, 2016, the Y had a '100 for 100' campaign to raise money for the organization in her name.

As her family and friends gathered on April 19 for the plaque dedication in the Baxter Y gymnasium, they bonded over stories of Annabel's outgoing, giving and friendly personality.

John Gray, a friend of Annabel's said she had a knack for making everyone feel comfortable around her.

When I retired from work, I wasn't involved in anything else," Gray said. "I got started out here in the YMCA in 1995, aerobic exercise class. Annabel was part of that class. She was a great person... She was friendly, outgoing and patient. I didn't know anyone here to begin with. She made me feel welcome to the Y and introduced me to people. Just being around her was great."

Kirchhofer's bill to expand addiction treatment options heads to governor

Mental health - State Rep. Cindy Kirchhofer's (R-Beech Grove) legislation that would broaden mental health and addiction treatment options in Indiana could soon be law.

"Indiana continues to find new, commonsense solutions to treat individuals afflicted with mental health and addiction issues," Kirchhofer said. "The opioid epidemic affects more than just the user and this measure is an example of our efforts to combat substance abuse problems. This plan would be a significant step in the right direction to connect drug users to the necessary resources to find a path to recovery."

House Enrolled Act 1006 includes neonatal abstinence syndrome as a factor for determining if a child is in need of services. Kirchhofer said children and mothers could receive medication-assisted treatment, which uses a combination of medicine and behavioral therapy to treat addiction. In addition, the Family and Social Services Administration could certify recovery residences in Indiana to provide quality standards in housing and assistance to chronic addicts. HEA 1006 can now be considered by the governor as a new law.

As a first-year participant, 15-year-old teen Justis Sanderson didn't expect to win. "I heard about the competition, but didn't think much of it," said Sanderson, a freshman at Franklin Central High School. "I was pretty excited about finding out I won, but it was about more than winning. My poem had a message, and I was glad people cared about what I had to say. I would encourage other teens to be involved in order to learn that they have the power to make a change." For more information, visit indypl.org, oppl.org and oaklandlibrary.org.

St. Barnabas teacher Megan Schaller earns a trip to NASA through her STEM promotion

FEATURE

By Nicole Davis

Careers in Science, Engineering, Technology and Math (STEM) are in high demand. For St. Barnabas Catholic School teacher Megan Schaller, it's a subject she's passionate about teaching and sharing.

"STEM is not a buzzword in the educational field," she said. "This is where our job market is going. As a country, we need to compete on this global economic platform. Not only is it something I love, it's relevant and important right now."

That passion about STEM earned Schaller a trip to NASA on April 17 to 18, where she got behind-the-scenes access to the space center and a close-up viewing of the rocket launch for the Orbital ATK CRS-7 cargo resupply mission.

Schaller has taught at St. Barnabas for four years. She was hired as a 6th grade science and social studies teacher.

"I didn't realize how much I loved science until I got to teaching it three times a day," she said. "When it came to the solar system, earth space science, I was lost in it."

Two years ago, she and two other St. Barnabas teachers, Ryan Schnarr and Doug Bauman, were accepted into the STEM Trustey Fellows through Notre Dame University's Center for STEM Education. In this three-year program, math and science teachers from across the country come together for two weeks of each year for professional development.

Since then, the three teachers have worked to make St. Barnabas "the STEM school." They have created an impact plan, with which they want to educate parents and students about the availability of careers in this field.

Once a month, the school has special STEM days. Each grade level does a full STEM lesson, taking two or more "letters" and using them in the same lesson.

This school year, St. Barnabas had its first Family STEM Night, offering mini STEM lessons, building robots, paper airplanes and more.

"We had more people than we were expecting," Schaller said. "It was packed from beginning to the end."

Feb. 21, Schaller was sitting at home, browsing Instagram, when she came across NASA Social, a program in which NASA's social media followers can earn opportunities to be included in NASA events. The deadline to apply for the March shuttle launch was that night.

"At first I closed my computer and walked away," Schaller said. "Realistically, it's about people with Youtube channels, people with thousands of followers. I have Twitter but can't tell you how to use it. But I couldn't walk away."

She applied, was first waitlisted and then accepted. Instead of posting about it through her personal pages, she created The Stemstronaut on Facebook, Instagram and Twitter. This allowed the public to follow her experience as she went.

The launch was supposed to take place on March 17 to 19. It was postponed multiple times before the date was rescheduled for April 18. She flew to Florida on Easter and reported to the Astronaut Training Experience the following morning.

"It was amazing," Schaller said. "It was a lot more behind-the-scenes stuff. Normally the groups are 50 people. This one was closer to 25 to 30. It was a much smaller group and you could be much more involved."

The first day, she visited the Vehicle Assembly Building, the tallest one-story building at 55 1/2 stories tall. Then they had a Q&A with the Commercial Crew followed by a visit to NASA TV where they met with engineers, project managers and head scientists about the rocket. One of Schaller's questions to an engineer was featured as a clip of the press conference online.

Then they ventured over to view the rocket. "It was impressive," she said. "We were about 1,000 feet away from the launch pad, which was incredibly close. It was smaller than I thought it was going to be. To see it 12 hours away from the launch as a civilian, to be that close, was cool."

The next morning, the NASA Social participants went to watch the launch, viewed more machinery and had opportunities to speak with more representatives.

In real time, she was posting her experience to Instagram and Twitter, then giving longer explanations on Facebook in the evening.

Now that she's back home, Schaller said she looks forward to the last of the STEM Trustey Fellows taking place this summer. The school has another STEM day on May 12, in which she plans to take the materials from her NASA experience and present it to the students.

"I will continue to post pictures of these students doing all of these amazing experiments," she said. "I'm sure everyone has heard the word STEM, but I want to bring it in a more concrete, visual way. They didn't just build something that takes a good picture. They used all of these skills. This has been a great catalyst to open up a new way to connect with people outside of the school. This is what St. Barnabas is doing and we will continue to do it."

From top, trustey fellows, St. Barnabas Team, Doug Bauman, Schaller and Ryan Schnarr. Shaller visited this crawler on April 18. It is the size of a baseball infield and has a top speed of one mile per hour when loaded. "Fun fact: they sell flight suits in the gift shop," Schaller posted as the caption to this photo.

Sandlin: Senate Concludes 2017 Session With Passage of Road-Funding Plan

Infrastructure – State Sen. Jack Sandlin (R-Indianapolis) praised the recent passage of a road funding plan that provides a long-term, sustainable blueprint for building and maintaining Indiana's transportation infrastructure.

"Indiana is the Crossroads of America, and we need the infrastructure to back that up," Sandlin said. "Being able to craft a road-funding plan without taking money away from other vital government services like education was one of our top priorities. This plan reflects that idea and will benefit those who drive our roads today and all those who will drive our roads in the future."

Highlights of the long-term road funding plan (House Enrolled Act 1002):

The 20-year plan is based on a user-pays approach, dedicating all of the taxes paid at the pump to road funding. This is the fairest system since those who pay the most will also get the most benefit.

- When fully phased in, HEA 1002 provides $1.2 billion per year in new road funding – about $850 million for state highways and about $350 million for local roads.
- For an average Hoosier driver, this plan will cost $5-$6 per month, based on a 10-cent gastax increase and a new $15 annual registration fee. This also creates a "fair share" annual registration fee for electric and hybrid vehicles that pay little or no gas taxes ($150 for electric vehicles and $50 for hybrids).
- The plan will relieve traffic congestion, increase highway safety, support economic development, and allow Indiana to achieve recommended road and bridge conditions.

The Senate is now adjourned "sine die" – which signifies the end of the 2017 Indiana General Assembly.

Seniors in Johnson County: A Leadership Johnson County Project

Resource - A project group, Senior Superstars, from the class of 2017 Leadership Johnson County, has created a website, to empower and educate seniors and their stakeholders, to find sources available to them in Johnson County and online. The team members include Karen Brandon, Andy Brock, Thelma Fisher, Michelle Hawkins, Kim Smith, Tim Settles, Johns Spista and Daniel Stahl. During the nine-month LJC course classmates have created a site SeniorsinJoCo. com which is hosted on the Aspire Johnson County Website. Classmates bonded over this topic and the staggering statistics that one out of five seniors in central Indiana is hungry. Many seniors are losing their life savings to fraudulent activity and it's simply challenging for seniors to know where to go for a variety of needs. Their mission is to enhance the quality of life for our aging adults in Johnson County. Seniors as well as their family, friends and caretakers can utilize the site for the abundance of resources within. Visit SeniorsInJoCo.com to explore the resources.

Next step for Next Stop

Main Street organization to file for planning grant for Beech Grove revitalization

FEATURE

By Nicole Davis

How will Beech Grove become the next stop, the next destination point?

Community members and business owners began asking that question and came up with Next Stop, Beech Grove. The organization officially became an Indiana Main Street organization through the Office of Community and Rural Affairs, the 120th community to join, on Oct. 25. Its members have been at work ever since, planning and preparing to make Beech Grove's Main Street a more lively area.

"Our mission statement is Next Stop, Beech Grove strives to revitalize and promote our community's cultural history while encouraging growth, historic preservation and sustainability," said Angel Calvert McKenna, who is also facility manager for the Hornet Park Community Center. "Everything we're doing is with that in mind."

Since October, Next Stop has hired a grant writer, Mike Kleinpeter. The organization, which has filed and is awaiting approval of 501c3 status, is currently looking into obtaining a planning grant. After that, they will apply for a facade grant to redevelop storefronts and replace facades that are crumbling.

"The city has done a lot the last few years years to improve our Main Street," said Jim Coffman, owner of Eckstein Shoe & Repair Store. "They worked on the sewer. They worked on the flooding issues. As business owners, as citizens of Beech Grove, we came to the conclusion that we need to step up and do our part as well. (On April 3) the council passed a resolution declaring us a blighted area to help us get funding down the road. They have agreed to help with funding. They are big supporters of our Main Street and I think they will continue to be. It's important that we all work together because we all have the same goal down the line. With a bustling main street comes additional jobs, additional events, additional revenue.

Of the 10 blocks of buildings that are outlined for Beech Grove's Main Street, there are an estimated 114 buildings or storefronts. Twenty-five of those are empty, with 88 businesses operating on Main Street.

"Now would be a great time for a businesses that is looking to relocate or open a new location, to get in early on Main Street in Beech Grove," said Kris Henthorn, Next Stop's president and owner of Henthorn Agency, Inc. "When this starts coming together, it will create a lot of opportunity.

Next Stop is currently accepting requests for quotes from engineers and architectural firms for the revitalization plan, through May 15. A public hearing is set for May 1, 7 p.m. at City Hall to discuss the funding and offer the opportunity to ask questions.

Next Stop will submit the planning grant application in June. The selected engineer/architect will work with the City, NSBG, and business owners from approximately September 2017 to February 2018, stated Kleinpeter in an email.

Proposed ordinance would turn Greenwood into economic development wasteland

As leaders of the two primary bodies charged with driving and facilitating economic development in Greenwood, we are writing to profess our unified, unequivocal opposition to Greenwood Common Council Ordinance 17-22.

This ordinance is a dangerous step in the wrong direction for Greenwood's economy. If approved, this legislation will initiate an almost immediate downward spiral for development projects, essentially rendering the City of Greenwood an economic development dead zone.

Since the ordinance received initial approval on April 17, we have fielded a number of calls and emails from concerned business leaders explaining its potentially disastrous consequences.

Industrial executives warn that expansion will no longer be economically feasible. Site selectors and private development professionals indicate Greenwood may be removed from future consideration altogether. The negative impact on jobs alone would be in the thousands.

Given new, blanket standards on design and construction, development plans for Old Town would be halted as well. This area cannot possibly meet standards listed in the State Road 135 overlay.

Unfortunately, this is just the short-term impact. Long-term negative effects would be significant as well.

During the past several years, Greenwood officials have worked very hard to position the city as an attractive option for private development. These efforts are working, and we are only beginning to reap the rewards.

Passage of this ordinance would reverse all progress made in this area, severely damaging the city's reputation among business leaders and economic development professionals.

We agree that architectural and building standards are important. However, overlay zoning should take into account an area's existing infrastructure and unique elements. For instance, the Greenwood City Center building – an impressive example of new construction and downtown revitalization – would not even qualify for the citywide overlay being discussed.

Greenwood is constantly competing for economic development opportunities. We are on the front line of these efforts, and the current landscape is challenging enough. Ordinance 17-22 would be a disastrous burden to this process, the impact of which may be impossible to overcome.

A hometown welcome to a Southside standout

There are names we hear a lot on the Southside, those who stand out amongst the crowd be it for their community leadership, artistic talents or athleticism. In this case, it's the latter.

Coincidentally, when we heard that Perry Meridian graduate and basketball standout Katie Douglas was to open Orangetheory Fitness studio in Greenwood at Smith Valley Road and State Road 135, we happened to be sorting through an old drawer filled with old photographs - a little spring cleaning for The Southside Times. Near the top of the stack was an image of Douglas in her Falcon's uniform, looking a little tired with her teammates stretching in the background. The undated photo was labeled Athlete of the Week.

Years later, and this standout athlete is spreading the enthusiasm with her new business. Orangetheory, greenwood.orangetheoryfitness.com, will celebrate its grand opening on April 27, 6 - 8 p.m. with more than 550 founding members. A press release stated, "Fitness and staying in shape has always been a foundation pillar for Douglas. She fell in love with Orangetheory Fitness, and discovered this workout while rehabilitating from a basketball injury. Following in her late parent's entrepreneurial footsteps, she continued her training and fitness goals and decided to open her own Orangetheory Fitness studio in her hometown of Greenwood...

Basketball and fitness has taken Katie Douglas all over the world but for her, there is no place like home."

Welcome back, Katie!

The Zookeeper's Wife Chastain strong in touching, fact-based film

MOVIE REVIEW

By Adam Staten

While it may be unpleasant to discuss, human beings are capable of mean, downright evil things. Some argue technology has made it easier for people to display their cruel nature. Whether it's a profane tweet, a hateful email or posting a video of an actual murder to Facebook, maliciousness and depravity can, at times, feel pervasive in our world. Despite this, even in the midst of evil, good can still be found. One recently released film depicts an example of the good some humans are capable of in the face of pure evil.

The Zookeeper's Wife is the story of the owners of the Warsaw Zoo and the great lengths they went to save hundreds of lives during WWII. As the film opens, shortly before the beginning of the war, Antonina Zabinski (Jessica Chastain) is making her morning rounds, checking on the zoo's many residents as customers file into the popular attraction. But as perfect as things might seem on the surface, everyone is understandably on edge. There are rumblings and whispers of Hitler's military moving into Poland.

Flash forward a few months, the Nazis now occupy Warsaw and have consolidated its Jewish population in the city's ghetto. While the Nazis control all of Warsaw, they do allow Antonia and Jan Zabinski to continue operating their zoo but under strict supervision. The Zabinski's strike a deal with the Nazis. They will use their zoo to raise pigs as food for the occupying military. However, this is a ruse. The Zabinskis take advantage of their somewhat friendly relationship with members of the military to hide Jews in their zoo and smuggle them out of the country.

As with most films starring Jessica Chastain, her performance is the highlight and that is indeed the case here. While there is not a weak performance in the entire film, Chastain stands out among the rest. Her work in the especially emotional and gutwrenching scenes as she empathizes and connects with those who have been subjected to unspeakable horror is likely to bring a tear to the viewer's eye.

Despite the strong work from Chastain, the film could have been easily improved if the story would've focused, even just a little more, on Antonina's husband, Jan Zabinski. He was by far the more interesting of the two characters. He interacted more with the Nazis, saw more of the horrors the Jews experienced and took up arms against the Nazis.

The Zookeeper's Wife runs a little long and focuses too much of its attention on a less compelling character, but its still a well-made film, highlighted by Jessica Chas-

Eat your vitamins

NUTRITION

By Wendell Fowler

"Our bodies are our gardens, our wills are our gardeners."

SHAKESPEARE

It's in my heart to love everyone, which enlightens my passion for teaching healthy eating habits: to teach the world how to eat all over again; to create the best version of their beautiful selves.

As you eat closer to earth, not a factory, you acknowledge creation and prevent mental and physical diseases caused from vitamin deficiencies. When you eat from earth, you activate your inner healer installed at birth by the divine. We're undernourished in America today and it shows as disease rates soar. Plus, it doesn't help that 95 percent of you don't consume the daily minimum of fruits, veggies, nuts, seeds and clean water as creation intended. Today's constellation of processed junk food offers little or no significant health-creating vitamins, minerals, protein, and fiber.

Disease rates soar due to vitamin deficiency from overly-processed food-like substances and lifestyle choices. Today's fruits and veggies contain less nutrition than they did 50 years ago. Picked early, immature produce is shipped 2,000 miles where they are aggressively sprayed with agrichemicals then harvested before their nutrition goodness has fully developed. Ergo, they contain significantly less nutrition since they were pulled off the vine too soon. Sure that helps the economy of the growers, but consequently, your health suffers.

The University of Texas at Austin's Department of Chemistry and Biochemistry and the Journal of the American College of Nutrition studied USDA nutritional data from both 1950 and 1999 for 43 different vegetables and fruits, finding "reliable declines" in the amount of protein, calcium, phosphorus, iron, riboflavin (vitamin B2) and vitamin C over the past half century. The National Academy of Sciences reports our vegetables don't have as many vitamins as they're supposed to. Drifting away from the family farm, once the backbone of America, today's mono-crop farming, growing a single crop year after year on the same land, in the absence of rotation, depletes earth.

When you eat local and close to earth you give your temple the best opportunity to live each day healthy and joyful. Visit and support your community farmers market where locally-grown produce, straight from the garden, brims with rainbows of wholesome nourishment. This season, celebrate and support your community farmer's market: will and till your Holy Temple garden with some love by eating from God's Apothecary. If not, at least take a food-based multi-vitamin and mineral supplement. Peace.

Weekly Devotion

9 For we know in part, and we prophesy in part.

10 But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away.

11 When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child: but when I became a man, I put away childish things.

12 For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known.

I CORINTHIANS 9-12

Have you heard anyone say or, have you yourself said, "I know I am not perfect," and meant it? What did they or you mean by it? Paul, in this letter to the Corinthian church says the same thing. He admits he does not know it all and never will in this lifetime, but what he does know, he so enjoys knowing.

I remember a time when I knew all the answers and didn't mind saving so. I was young and very foolish. Now, I realize that I don't only not know all of the answers but I don't even know all of the questions. Who does? Who among us can tell me the depth of the wisdom and the knowledge of God? I have so much to learn. I am excited about learning those things and learning as much as I can in this lifetime. Like Enoch of old, I want to walk with God every day and to fellowship with Him to such a degree that when He decides to take me by the hand and walk me out of this world into His eternal presence, I won't be a stranger. I want to feel right at home with Him.

One of these days I will stand in the presence of almighty God and get to visit with Him face to face. Then I will see me and maybe for the first time I will see me as God has seen me for all of these years. I know that the "me" that I am has presented Him with some serious study and a whole lot of love. He has loved me, though. And, by the way, oh how He has and does love you also.

God bless and go and have a great day.

Paul A. Kirby is the pastor at the Church of God at 3939 S. Emerson Ave.
