Aspire announces 2024 legislative priorities

Aspire Johnson County's priorities for the 2024 Indiana General Assembly session include supporting quality early childhood education expansion and creative workforce incentives. Studies show children who are ready for kindergarten are more likely to be reading at the third-grade level by the end of third grade, and more likely to graduate high school. As well, Aspire supports policies that can include, but are not limited to tax credits, career counseling, remote workforce incentives, tuition assistance, licensure reciprocity, investment in trainings, work-based learning opportunities and affordable housing initiatives.

Rebels without a Claus

Two mischievous elves keep a Center Grove's family on their toes this Christmas

By Sherri Coner

Wearing bright green Grinch pajamas, Kieran Lewandowski-Rhoads, 7, answered the door while spluttering excitedly about an unexpected visit from a couple of elves named Billy and Millie.

"They said they liked the way I decorated my bathroom," said this first grader at North Grove Elementary School. "They said I did it really good."

With a knowing smile, Kieran's mom, Jamie Lewandowski said, "Every time he likes something new, we decorate his bathroom like that."

After a surprise visit from a couple of elves, Kieran Lewandowski-Rhoads, 7, of Center Grove poses with his artwork to decorate his bathroom.

An elf-taught Christmas decorator

This year Kieran's love for a game called Garten of Banban caused Mom to break out some additional creativity. After she couldn't find shower curtains or decorative items to go along with Kieran's new theme, Jamie ordered a plain white shower curtain and vinyl stickers of the characters. After she and Kieran decorated the shower curtain, he drew pictures of his favorite Garten of Banban characters and painted them for Mom to hang on the bathroom walls.

"He did a really, really good job," Jamie said with a smile. "He's my little artist."

Kieran didn't want anyone to forget that his really good job was rewarded by Billie and Millie's surprise visit. They not only wrote a note; they also left a surprise sweet treat.

Although this visit was problem-free, this mom and son team of Christmas lovers never have any idea what Billy and Millie will get into when they visit.

Elf-destructive behavior

"They toilet papered my toy room one time," Kieran said with a giggle.

Another time, those bratty elves ziplined from one light to another.

According to Kieran, the bad-behaving elves have used the kitchen sink as a bathroom before and also snuck over to his mommy's workplace, where she is the Center Grove High School attendance secretary.

Another time, they mailed themselves to Kieran's papa's house.

Not long after the turkey mess from Thanksgiving is cleared, there's a winter wonderland inside and outside too, at the Center Grove home of Jamie Lewandowski and her son, Kieran Lewandowski-Rhoads.

Actually, no one can blame Billy and Millie for spending a lot of time at this Center Grove address.

Outside the home, Santa is celebrated all around the yard and even on the roof.

Sleigh'ing it with holiday decor

Inside, stuffed Christmas animals line the stairway. Bookshelves are filled with colorful decorations. Santa jackets cover dining room chairs. A huge talking Santa hangs around near the fireplace. And the mantel is lined with stockings.

Jamie's father, Raymond Lewandowski, who passed away in October 2022, raised her and older sister Shannon Procter of Greenwood, alone.

Their dad always made a big, magical deal at Christmas.

In fact, once gifts were opened and the girls thought Santa's job was complete, Raymond surprised his daughters with one more gift, Jamie said with a smile.

She carries this tradition on for Kieran.

Always, Jamie said she has loved to decorate for holidays, especially Christmas.

But when her only child came along, December decorating took on a whole new purpose ... for a little guy with big bright eyes and ever-lasting energy.

Bad Santa

Billy and Millie are not the only mess makers when they visit.

Someone else is also kinda sloppy.

"He leaves the milk spills on the table," Kieran said of the mysterious big guy in red. "And he leaves crumbs around the plate from the cookies."

But Kieran has an understanding attitude about the mess.

"Santa has to do his job before everyone wakes up. He has to eat quickly," he said with a smile.

"They toilet papered my toy room one time."

Top 10 recent complaints from Mrs. Santa Claus

By Torry Stiles

10. Just once I would like to go out for dinner, but there aren't a lot of restaurants at the North Pole.
9. No matter what he always comes home from work smelling like reindeer butt.
8. He can make it all around the world delivering billions of presents but can't manage to put a fresh roll on the toilet paper holder.
7. I go out for a Girl's Night with some of the elves, and all they want to talk about is who's seeing who in the toy train department.
6. If one more reindeer craps on the roof I'm making deer sausage.
5. The talking snowmen are always arguing over who's got the biggest, um, snowdrift.
4. He'll get to drinking and start asking why I don't look as hot as the TV Mrs. Clauses.
3. Rudolph went all Hollywood on us years ago and only shows up if Santa pays him in cash and magic corn.
2. I'm always worried that he's out all night and knows who's naughty.
1. I'm pretty sure some of the elves are doing pixie dust behind the reindeer barn.

Home Alone

A Christmas guilty-pleasured-turned-classic

MOVIE REVIEW

By Bradley Lane

The John Hughes-produced, and Christopher Columbus-directed 1990 Christmas classic Home Alone has not always been regarded in that classic status. Critical reception for the film was mostly positive but ultimately consensus was lukewarm citing the implausible plot, mean-spiritedness of the family and especially the gratuitous slapstick violence unleashed on the two villains of the film. Despite these reservations from critics, the film was an instant box office smash hit, and it remained in theaters as late as June of the year after its initial November release. The reason for its massive popularity is immediately evident if you have seen the film; Home Alone is one of, if not, the most fun films ever made.

The conceit of the film, being left alone without any parental supervision, is a universal power fantasy every child can immediately relate to, and any adult can remember fondly longing for: complete freedom and zero responsibilities. That coupled with the second half's idea of rising to the occasion and bravely defending yourself from unambiguously terrible goons in spectacular fashion makes for comedic and narrative gold. But the concept alone is not what makes Home Alone so beloved and rewatchable. The true magic behind Home Alone is solid technical filmmaking and profound levels of creative artistry. No, seriously.

The editing in Home Alone by Raja Gosnell has the pinpoint precision of a well-timed stand-up comedian. Apart from the inherently hilarious sight of grown men being outsmarted and beat up by a small child, the jokes throughout are aided by perfect comedic timing in each of the cuts. To use an example from an iconic scene, the wide over-the-shoulder shot of Kevin getting ready in the mirror reveals the setup that he's about to put aftershave on his face, then slightly before he applies it, it cuts to a close-up to juxtapose his cool-collected speech to himself with the joke that he's a 9-year-old and most definitely did not expect the acholic burn on his face leading to his now iconic scream.

There is a near infinite number of positives I could mention when discussing why the film works as well as it does (Macaulay Culkin's charismatic performance, the inspired use of extreme slapstick, the endlessly quotable script or the "don't judge a book by its cover" messaging) but I want to home in on one often overlooked aspect of the film's greatness, its score. Composed by the legendary John Williams, his score for this film is particularly impressive because it seamlessly blends itself in with the classic Christmas tunes worked into the film. It would then be easy for the score to get lost in the timeless songs we already know, but it toes a perfect line between not clashing with the Christmas standards while asserting itself as instantly classic and memorable.

Home Alone is an endlessly enjoyable Christmas classic thanks to great filmmaking, a million-dollar idea and unforgettable performances and is currently available to stream on Disney Plus. – 5/5 Stars

How to purposefully punctuate the holiday season

GRAMMAR GUY

By Curtis Honeycutt

This is most likely my oldest son's last year believing in Santa. I think he's onto the big lie my wife and I have been spinning. Will he ruin it for his younger siblings? I sure hope not. After all, our 6-year-old told me just yesterday, "Dad, if you're naughty, Santa will give you Coke in your stocking." Bless her heart.

As you know, my expertise isn't in Mr. Claus; it's in mystery clauses. Christmas has plenty to teach us about punctuation, so let's delve down the chimney of Christmas present tense.

Semicolons can really slay if you use them the right way. In fact, they connect clauses better than Mrs. Claus Facetiming Santa from the North Pole. A semicolon connects two related independent clauses; they replace a comma and a coordinating conjunction. Here's an example: Last Christmas Eve, it was too foggy to navigate the sleigh safely; Santa called on Rudolph to save the day.

Speaking of sleighs, it helps to buckle up while dashing through the snow (lest you get UpSOT). In punctuation, a dash adds emphasis to a phrase. Dashes take the place of commas to offset writing in a dramatic way. For example, "The Grinch — who hated anything related to Christmas — stole Christmas from all the citizens of Whoville."

Christmas is a season of anticipation. For those who celebrate the spiritual aspect of Christmas, the Advent season reminds us that the long-awaited Messiah would be born in a humble stable in Bethlehem. Toy-loving kids find great anticipation in going to bed on Christmas Eve so Santa can bring them toys. In punctuation, colons build a sense of anticipation. They indicate something exciting is coming, whether it's a list, quote or explanation. Curtis has a long Christmas wish list: new pens, novelty socks and a 1968 Nolan Ryan/Jerry Koosman rookie card.

The best way to spread Christmas cheer is by singing loudly for all to hear. Similarly, commas are like Santa's helpers in the magical realm of punctuation. They help to clarify sentences. Commas tell your reader where to pause and break up the flow of words, making it easier to understand what you mean. Noticing the cookies and milk, Santa took a few seconds to devour a midnight snack.

Think of punctuation marks like glitter — a little bit goes a long way. When you go overboard with punctuation, your sentences are littered with excessive, sparkly dots.

Help not wanted as an emergency contact

HUMOR

By Dick Wolfsie

This story was inspired by an actual event. The names have not been changed.

It was about 3 a.m. when Mary Ellen nudged me and asked, "Are you having a medical emergency?"

I was sleeping peacefully and until she woke me up, enjoying a great dream. I was a bit woozy.

"Who are you?" I asked Mary Ellen. "And where is Margot Robbie?"

"Very funny. Dick, I just got a text on my cell phone that you called for emergency assistance. I didn't see the message right away. Are you OK?"

I looked at my phone and sure enough there was a call to 911. Then suddenly I received another text from Nettie, our longtime housekeeper.

"Dick, it's Nettie. Are you OK? I just got an alert on my phone that you were having some kind of crisis."

I texted back, "In what kind of crisis would I need you?"

"I thought maybe you spilled something on the rug when you went for a late-night snack and didn't want Mary Ellen to see it in the morning."

My wife and I were very perplexed as to why Nettie even got the alert. Then another text arrived. It was from Patty Spittle, my former co-host years ago on WISH-TV and a well-known TV personality.

"Are you OK, Dick?" she asked. "I just got a 911 alert you were having some serious problems. Do you need help with an ad-lib or a funny last line for your column? Can't this wait 'till the morning?"

I apologized to Patty and told her it was a false alarm. Then a final text. This time from my brother in New York who drives for Uber. The emergency text had awakened him.

"Dick, it's Peter. If you are having serious health issues, I can't help you right away. But if it's a real emergency, I can be there in 12 hours, but that's going to run you about $1,500 and I refuse to come back light (this is cab talk for having no passenger on the return trip).

Mary Ellen finally figured it all out. I must have listed Nettie, Patty and my brother as alternative contacts on my phone health app in case Mary Ellen couldn't be reached. Why I had picked two of those particular people, I have no clue. I decided to change my emergency contacts. But I needed to find volunteers who would be available and willing to help at a moment's notice. Mary Ellen finally agreed to remain a contact, but it took a little convincing and an expensive dinner out. My brother was a bad option. He's too far away and much too expensive. Nettie was a possibility, but she's only available on the third Tuesday of each month.

So, who made that emergency call? I did, of course. Apparently, I had accidentally clicked the emergency button on the bottom-left corner of my iPhone just before I dozed off.

I am pleased that the folks at 911 tried so desperately to assist me with my emergency that I wasn't really having. If Mary Ellen had not gotten back to them, I am sure I would have had a police car, an ambulance and a fire truck in front of my house in no time.

I am still missing two emergency contacts. Patty said I could put her back on the list after she retires. At the rate she's going, I don't think I'll live that long.

Weekly Devotion

Therefore I tell you, whatever you ask for in prayer, believe that you have received it, and it will be yours.

MARK 11:24

Tis the season of peace and good will toward man. We think of peace as the sense of stillness we long for from the hustle and bustle of last-minute Christmas shopping. We try to focus on the reason for the season, but it is easy to lose our sense of peace when we face road raging traffic, increased prices and the uncertainty of whether we will even find that perfect gift in stock. For many years I worked the night shift "drunk tank" of lock up. Instead of hearing silver bells from Santa's sleigh, I would hear the distinct sounds of chains rattling as they delivered inmates in chain gangs from the patty wagons into the jail. I will forever remember the large picture of Santa Claus over the entrance depicting Santa sitting on a toilet checking his list twice, with a calendar beneath him counting down the number of shopping days left till Christmas. As children we learned that if we were good, and if we wrote letters to Santa and then mailed them to the North Pole, we might get what we asked for. The truth of the matter is that it is not our letters to Santa that bring us the desires of our hearts as much as it is our prayers of faith. God's presence brings us the greatest peace, not in the stillness of life's quiet moments, but instead it is as He walks and talks with us in the chaos of this world's most difficult battles. The greatest present is not found in a gift-wrapped box beneath a tree, it is found in His presence as we pray on bended knee!

God bless and go and have a great day.

Pastor Dan Bailey is the chair of the Mayor's Faith Based Round Table for the City of Beech Grove, who believes in its mission statement to "Strengthen the Community with Christ's Love." He is a lifelong resident of Southside with his wife, four children and five grandchildren. He has also been a criminal investigator for the last 30-plus years for the Public Defender Agency.

Our community.
Our stories.

Every week, we aim to share the best of the Southside community sharing the stories of people who make a difference every day.

What stories in the community deserve to be told? What community icons deserve recognition for what they do for Southside residents and organizations?
